British bombs blamed on IRA

LONDON (AP) — A letter bomb at the Bank of England injured three men Saturday and a second explosive went off in a women's shop. The blasts continued a week-long wave of explosions and bomb scares blamed on Irish Republican Army extremists.

The bombings, along with a host of fraudulent threats, have disrupted the lives of thousands of British shoppers, holiday travelers and sports fans.

Derek Woodward, 44, was seriously injured in the explosion of the letter bomb in the mail room of the fortress-like Bank of England. Woodward had a hand amputated and then underwent more surgery. Two of his colleagues suffered relatively minor injuries.

Bomb scares that followed the blast stretched London's police force to the limits. Police cleared major train stations packed with travelers at the start of a three-day end-of-summer weekend, then checked out bomb threats.

Thousands of shoppers were cleared out of stores on Oxford Street, London's department store row. A small incendiary device went off there, causing no injuries. A bigger bomb was defused.

A bomb threat also was made against thousands of fans at a stadium on the opening day of the soccer season.

Of all the bomb scares, however, possibly the most shocking to the British came at Lords, seat of the national game, cricket.

Police forced nearly 30,000 fans to leave the grounds while a bomb threat was checked. It was an hour before they let the fans back in and the match between England and the West Indies was resumed.

In the last week more than 30 explosive devices have been uncovered at various London landmarks. Intended targets have included Prime Minister Edward Heath and the Defense Ministry.

Most explosions have come from small incendiary devices in stores. They have done little damage. Most lethal letter bombs and bombs in shopping baskets have been defused.

Before Saturday's Bank of England blast, the only other serious explosion came from a letter bomb opened Friday in an office at the London Stock Exchange. A secretary suffered facial, arm and leg injuries, and an exchange official was slightly hurt.

Scotland Yard has examined the materials used in the bombs and is convinced they are identical to those used by Irish terrorists. The IRA is trying to drive Britain out of its largely Protestant province of Northern Ireland and reunite the province with the Roman Catholic Irish republic just to the south.

IRA spokesmen in Ireland have refused comment on the London bombings. They were quick to claim responsibility for the only two previous IRA attacks in England in recent years.

One, a bomb at the British military base at Aldershot near London, took seven lives last year. In March, bombs at the Old Bailey Criminal Court and at the Ministry of Agriculture killed one man and injured 200 other people.

Authorities have long feared that the IRA could mount a sustained terrorist attack in London in an effort to force a British withdrawal from Northern Ireland.

Before this, however, the IRA has confined almost all its operations to Ireland, largely on grounds that attacks in England could increase pressure for an all-out crackdown by British security forces in Northern Ireland.

While injuries so far have been relatively few, London police are taking bomb threats seriously.

Arms limitation collapsing?

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon may push for very accurate "hard-target" warheads and possibly for bigger missiles if the Russians drive toward a clear advantage over the United States.

High defense officials are known to be considering a range of possible actions to prevent a nuclear imbalance against the United States, if the Soviets balk at effective long-term curbs on offensive weapons during the current round of Strategic Arms Limitation (SALT) talks.

A "hard-target" warhead would be one so precise that it could pluck out such heavily shielded targets as belowground command and control centers and storage depots for nuclear warheads, as well as missile-launching silos.

Other options include:

—Refitting present Minuteman III intercontinental missiles with six or seven warheads apiece, instead of the present three warheads. These multiple warheads, called MIRVs, can be aimed at separate targets.

—Developing missiles that could be moved around to ultimate firing sites by rail or road, thus making them less vulnerable to surprise knockout than present land-based missiles which are fixed in underground launch silos.

The administration already has asked Congress for $23 million to keep open the Minuteman production line beyond this fiscal year, although there is no intention yet to build more than the presently planned 550 Minuteman III MIRV weapons.

This, along with a $6 million proposal to start developing components for a mobile longrange missile, were offered by the Pentagon earlier this year as hedges that anticipated Russian achievement of the MIRV.

Now the Russians have successfully tested MIRVs, and defense officials are not optimistic that the Soviets will be in a mood to agree to the kind of limitations on offensive weaponry that would maintain a true balance.

The Russian breakthrough has gone a long way toward overcoming a major U.S. technological advantage in MIRVs, which the United States achieved over five years ago.

It was that American advantage in warheads that prompted U.S. negotiators to accept a temporary five-year arrangement conceding the Russians a

Chrysler 'obvious' strike pick

DETROIT (AP) — "It was an obvious target," said United Auto Workers President Leonard Woodcock referring to the union's decision to single out Chrysler Corp. for a possible strike in current industry contract negotiations.

Union officials said the major reason for choosing Chrysler is that it is the only one of the Big Three auto makers to have a contract covering Canadian as well as U.S. workers.

But there were many other possible reasons, ranging from the national political climate to the union's internal politics and the condition of the industry and economy as a whole.

And most of the factors added up to naming Chrysler — the nation's third largest auto maker and fifth largest industrial corporation — as the UAW's best bet in seeking a pace-setting agreement for all of the union's nearly 800,000 auto workers. Current contracts expire Sept. 14.

CHRYSLER'S CONDITION: After years in tottering economic shape, the heavy car demand of the '70s has put Chrysler back on its feet. For the first six months of this year, the firm reported record earnings of $198 million on record sales of $8.1 billion.

The firm's resurgence has eliminated fears a strike would put Chrysler out of business.

In addition, the UAW struck Ford for 66 days in 1967 and General Motors for 67 days three years ago in the costliest walkout in history. Now it's Chrysler's turn. The firm hasn't been struck since 1950.

THE RANK AND FILE: There is little evidence of any significant erosion of the union's rank and file support at any of the auto makers, but the most visible challenge to the UAW authority this year has come at Chrysler.

Militant workers, with varying employee support, have staged wildcat strikes at three of Chrysler's older Detroit plants.

Record industry probe deepens

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Federal prosecutors are intensifying their probe of possible kickbacks and tax violations in the multimillion dollar record industry. Sources say that before it's over, the inquiry may dig deeper than the payola scandal of the 1950s.

The latest investigation began in June when a grand jury was formed to take evidence about alleged underworld connections and financial mismanagement among executives at Columbia Records. The alleged wrongdoing surfaced during an investigation by the U.S. attorney's office in Newark of a heroin ring operating between Canada and New Jersey. One of the ring members allegedly had dealings with Columbia executives.

The grand jury probe, headed by Asst. Attorney Jonathan L. Goldstein, is being handled with rigid secrecy.

But recent courtroom maneuvers and comments by industry sources, indicate the probe is wide and deep.

Among the recent events are:

—The reported issuance of subpoenas to at least eight major record companies — Columbia, Atlantic, Elektra, Warner Bros., Stax, Chess Janus, London and Bell.

—The issuance of subpoenas to at least 20 New York City and New Jersey radio stations, many of which specialize in rock music programming.

—The revelation at a court hearing that Stax Records of Memphis, a leading soul music label, lost $406,000 in 1971 because of an alleged scheme in which two vice presidents were involved in kickbacks with Stax distributors.

—The news that some of the most prestigious law firms in the nation have been retained by the record companies. Stax has hired the firm of Edward Bennet Williams in Washington and handling the matter for the Williams firm is Aubrey M. Daniel III, who, as an Army captain, prosecuted Lt. William L. Calley Jr. in 1970 in the My Lai massacre case.

—The indication that on the government's side at least four assistant U.S. attorneys are devoting full time to the probe and that a task force of Internal Revenue Service agents is pouring over the subpoenaed documents, including personnel files of radio station employees and voluminous files of record company dealings with distributors and radio stations.

"It seems to be a much more systematic approach than was taken in the 1950s payola investigation," an industry observer said.

Officials have been playing down one aspect of the inquiry: the possible links between organized crime and the record industry.

Early in the investigation, one government source described a possible pattern in which mob families were moving into the record industry and taking over control of temperamental rock artists to keep them in line. Since then, officials have made it clear that the Justice Department's organized crime experts are no longer involved in the investigation.

Much of the current work is believed to be in the hands of the Intelligence Division of the IRS.

Payola is a general term to describe payments, by record companies either in cash or goods, to radio stations or record companies in return for the playing or buying of the company's records. IRS auditors presumably are looking at corporate and personal financial records for unusual or large cash transactions that may be evidence of payola.

IRS officials will not discuss the case.

Skylab power problems seen

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Officials expressed concern Saturday that batteries aboard the Skylab space station may be degrading more rapidly than expected, possibly spelling power problems aboard the orbiting lab in the weeks ahead.

Officials made the assessment after tests by Skylab 2 astronauts Alan L. Bean, Jack R. Lousma and Dr. Owen K.

Garriott showed that five of the 17 working batteries aboard the spaceship have lost about 40 per cent of their capacity to hold an electrical charge.

There was no immediate concern for the astronauts or for their mission, but flight controller Milt Windler said the problem could lead to a need for power conservation measures aboard Skylab.

Skylab 2, meanwhile, became history's longest space mission. At 8:01 a.m. EDT Saturday, Bean, Garriott and Lousma passed the 28-day 50-minute space flight record of Skylab 2.

The spacemen said they expected to complete their full 59-day mission and were feeling well, except for one minor problem reported by Lousma.

The astronaut told Mission Control he had a small sty on his right eyelid.

"It's not bothering me much," Lousma said, adding that an ointment seems to be keeping the infection under control.

Windler said the Skylab batteries tested are able to hold only about 12 amp hours of electrical power each. They originally had a charge capacity of 20 amp hours.

"We're quite a number of amp hours lower than we thought," said Windler. In the short range, "it's only an annoyance" but it could lead to curtailing some of the science activities that cause a high power drain, he said.

Skylab is powered by solar cells which convert sunlight to electricity. The craft, however, spends about 30 minutes in darkness in each orbit.

Batteries power the craft while it is in darkness and the batteries are recharged during the sunlight part of the orbit.

As the recharge ability of the batteries degrades, however, less and less power is available in darkness.

Dean remembered as magician

MARION, Ohio (AP) — Here in this central Ohio town, they remember John Dean as a good talker, a mediocre student, a passable athlete. And as a magician.

Everyone on the block came when young John Dean tacked up posters advertising his neighborhood magic shows. Nothing too elaborate, just a long table set up in the living room and covered with objects he would make disappear, change color or alter shape.

"He was impeccable, neatly dressed and his equipment was just the same way," recalls a former teacher, D.J. Sansotta, who was then president of the local branch of the International Brotherhood of Magicians.

A neatly dressed John W. Dean III, now 34, testified before the Senate Watergate committee that President Nixon had knowledge of the Watergate break-in and cover-up. He appeared after being ousted as White House counsel, a position of stature few would have predicted for the blond youth who seemed most captivated by pulling a rabbit out of a hat.

Dean arrived in Marion in 1952 for seventh grade and carried a "C" average into high school. Friends recall he golfed at the Marion Country Club during the summer, swam at the YMCA during the winter — and studied magic.

He pulled scarves from his sleeves, live doves from his hat and turned shredded newspaper into a full bouquet of flowers.

"I worked a few shows with him — a Christmas party at the country club, at a few private homes for children and some charity performances," recalls Bob Bagley, now an advertising executive in New Jersey.

"He was the honcho and I was the sidekick. I gave him the chopped up newspaper. He had some kind of deal where the chopped up newspaper became a bouquet of flowers."

Another buddy of the time, Dave DeWolfe, remembers:

"John had gotten into it very deeply. He was even working on one of those floating ladies tricks. He was a pretty accomplished fellow."

Dean apparently was more interested in magic than studying for good grades. His eighth and ninth grade arithmetic teacher, now retired at 76, remembers him as "an average student who never came up to his potential."

"He was a good talker," said the teacher, who asked that her name not be used. "He could have done more if he would have worked as hard. I would often say to him, 'If you use this much effort on really producing, you could do it.'"

"I can still see him in my classroom. There were those sharp eyes."

Many events led to plot warning

EDITOR'S NOTE: Almost a week after the Secret Service disclosed a plot to assassinate President Nixon in New Orleans, there appears little chance any arrests will be made in the case. Here is a look at what led the Secret Service to make that unprecedented announcement. It was compiled by Associated Press reporters Jim Brigrance, Jerry Estill and Eric Newhouse.

NEW ORLEANS, La. (AP) — Just hours before President Nixon was scheduled to ride down New Orleans' Canal Street in an open-car parade last Monday, the Secret Service announced that a possible conspiracy to assassinate him had been uncovered.

Now, almost a week later, New Orleans police are reported to have little prospects of making arrests in the case, although they know the men allegedly involved and are keeping them under observation.

But a police source said no arrests are likely without additional evidence and termed chances of getting it slim. The Secret Service, however, says it is still probing and arrests could be made. A spokesman would not elaborate.

A former New Orleans policeman was arrested last week in New Mexico and charged with threatening the President's life, but police said he was not connected with the alleged assassination conspiracy.

The charges against the former policeman, Edwin M. Gaudet, 29, were dropped Friday when a witness was unable to positively identify him as the man she had previously said threatened to kill the President.

Who, then, is involved in the alleged conspiracy? And how serious a threat was it to Nixon's life?

The answers to those questions — and many others concerning the alleged plot and the subsequent investigation of it — remain wrapped in a cloak of official secrecy.

But although many pieces of the puzzle are missing, at least a partial picture can be pieced together.

Police Supt. Clarence Giarrusso says his New Orleans department began investigating reports of a conspiracy a week before Nixon was scheduled to arrive to address the Veterans of Foreign Wars national convention.

But sources in a position to know say the reports told of a meeting involving six black militants at which assassination plans were discussed, and of a later session at which one man gave another a high-powered rifle with which to shoot Nixon.

New Orleans police reported the information to the Secret Service, charged with protecting the President.

In Washington, the Secret Service cranked the reports into its files, along with dozens of similar ones that are methodically checked out as part of the day-by-day routine of protecting the President.

Secret Service agents in New Orleans, here preparing security for Nixon's visit, joined forces with the FBI and the New Orleans police in checking into the alleged plot.

Then, at mid-week, a woman told authorities of an incident that set off a new round of activity.

It occurred at Waterbury's, a drug store on Canal Street. One of the few downtown establishments open all night, Waterbury's is a miniature Grand Central Station, its snack counter a popular stop for those winding up an evening in the nearby French Quarter and the sidewalk in front a gathering place for those pointed out to tourists as "local characters."

Inside that store, the woman said, she heard a man threaten Nixon's life, not once but several times over a two-week period.

Five days before the President was scheduled to arrive, the woman said, she heard the man say someone ought to kill

Nixon and declare, "If no one else has the guts, I'll do it."

Police began to look for Gaudet. When they started trying to find him is not known. But the former policeman's father, Edwin Gaudet, manager of a downtown hotel, said no one asked him about his son's whereabouts until the night before Nixon's scheduled arrival. The elder Gaudet said he told them his son was in New Mexico and had been "for some time. Two days after the younger Gaudet was arrested, the woman said she was no longer positive he was the man she heard make the threats.

Then, in the early morning hours of Monday, while Nixon slept hundreds of miles away at his Key Biscayne, Fla., retreat, new developments in New Orleans brought additional concern to the Secret Service.

Friendship Between Women: Why It's Different... Why It's Better, By Rona Jaffe

"Men talk a lot about their old loyalties, their lifetime friends, their old school pals, their old Army buddies, but can they really confide their weaknesses to each other?"

When I was growing up, long before anyone had heard of Women's Lib, most of us little girls were taught that other little girls were not to be trusted: they were catty, selfish, treacherous and would steal your boyfriends, not because they particularly wanted your boyfriends but because it was an instinct born in women to acquire men. Despite this indoctrination, and despite the fact that some of the girls we knew at school were catty, treacherous, and did steal not only boyfriends but clothes and money as well, all of us managed to have close friends, and of course at least one real Best Friend.

Life without one's best girl friend would have been unendurable. Who else would listen to your innermost secrets, never laugh at you, understand, give sympathetic advice, commiserate, and never tell? It was always understood between best friends that no man could ever be the cause of a falling out: if both of you liked the same boy it had to be consecutively, never simultaneously. You could never date your best friend's ex-boyfriend until she had stated that she was through with him, no matter how many times he appeared at your dorm when she was out and offered to take you for a ride as long as he was there anyway. You were wise to that ploy; that was treacherous. You and your best friend either actually agreed or at least understood by instinct that no casual man, no ego trip, no fling, could ever come between you. He would have to be The Man, and then of course everything would be different, but you both hoped (and really rather knew) that you would never both fall madly in love with the same man at the same time and want him for life, because that was one of the reasons you were such well-matched and trusting girl friends.

When we all grew up and Women's Lib came along to tell us that women were wonderful, any of us who had a best friend already knew it. Men talk a lot about their old loyalties, their lifetime friends, their old school pals, their old Army buddies, but can they really confide their weaknesses to each other? Can they cry in front of their best buddy, unless they're dead drunk and then pretend to have forgotten all about it in the morning? Can they tell each other how afraid they are—not in the foxhole, where pretense is allowed to vanish, but in the office, where sometimes pretense is all there is? Can a man tell his best friend he thinks his wife may be cheating on him, that he's worried sick and what should he do? Can a man tell his best friend that he feels inadequate? There are so many areas in which we humans feel inadequate, and sometimes being able to share these fears with someone close can make them go away. But men seem to have been brought up to act strong, not to admit to weakness and fear, and so when men get together with their best friends it seems they are always doing something: playing tennis, bowling, having a drink, playing cards, fishing, camping, chasing girls, talking business, watching some sports event live or on TV. These are things men can only "do with men." Actually they could do most of them alone or with their dogs, but they choose to do them with their men friends because it is their way of expressing their friendship.

We women, on the other hand, do not have to express our friendship by doing things together. We know that it is usually quicker to shop alone, and when we shop or lunch or play tennis or go to the movies together it is usually for efficiency as well as companionship. When we want to be together we are simply together: we sit down and talk. We talk in our kitchens and living rooms and in restaurants, and we have long talks on the telephone, a gadget to which most men seem to be allergic except when used for business. A man gets off the phone as soon as possible; communication that is not face to face seems to disturb him. Women understand the warmth of a phone talk with one's closest friend when there is a problem to be solved, a fear to be shared and dispersed, or just when one is bored or lonely. Men think they are practical because they use the phone to make dates. We women know we are practical because we use the phone to avoid making dates: why not talk now?

"A man gets off the phone as soon as possible; communication that is not face to face seems to disturb him. Women understand the warmth of a phone talk with one's closest friend...."

One of the things women who are close friends can talk about at almost inexhaustible length is sickness and health. Men are so squeamish (or are they just indoctrinated still to exude that image of physical invincibility?) that it is a wonder so many men become doctors. Women know that the female body is important and sometimes delicate; we are fascinated by its care and upkeep, we know its well-being is vital. "What did the doctor say?" can set off a monologue between close women friends. Two close men friends would rather talk about what the garage mechanic told them about the car—it's not a threatening subject. But what did the doctor say? "Nothing."

In the giving up of their free time to help each other, men and women are about equal. But the way many women's lives are structured today, with a job and a home to take care of, there is more need of friends to reciprocate in giving up their free time to help other friends, in child-watching or all the fetching and depositing of young children that our busy lives demand, and the women friends come through. Women are much less hesitant than men to ask their friends for favors, largely because we women have always been asked to help, to do things, to come through when there's no one else around, no matter how inconvenient the circumstances, and so we expect the same warmth and courtesy from our close friends that we give to them.

The one area in which women are much more reluctant than men to ask their friends to come through is money. Women very rarely ask their girl friends for a loan, largely because women have been underpaid for so long that we know it would be a silly request. Who has any extra money? Women are still used to asking men for money: father, husband, brother, boss, boyfriend, and if all those fail there's always the man at the bank. Men sometimes ask women for money, and seem to have no guilt about it. Apparently the memory of Mama is still warm in their hearts.

A group of women may look silly dividing the check in a restaurant, but a man looks sillier picking up the check for the whole group when he can't afford it. We women may be phony as can be with strangers we don't trust, but we don't have false pride with our good friends. We know that a good friend is irreplaceable, but a friend you have to fool to keep is not worth keeping.

Now, medical science has the power to say to you:

BEGIN YOUR "MIDDLE YEARS" AT 70, 80, EVEN 90!

Announcing — an incredibly simple, medically proven, overwhelmingly documented ANTI-AGING program that is designed to:

give you the lean, glowing look of a youngster past sixty . . .

retain the strength and grace and power of a trained athlete in your body beyond your seventies . . .

and keep you in vibrant good health till ninety or more . . . even if you feel "rotten" today . . . even if your mother or father died far too young of diseases that are STILL carried in your bloodstream!

Yes, This Medical "Youth-Building Program" is so Strong That It Can Even Overcome Poor Heredity!

It is so strong, in fact, that it may actually make you look twenty or more years younger than your parents did at the same age . . . at the same exact time that it enables you to live thirty or forty years longer than they did!

We realize, of course, that these facts may seem virtually impossible to you at this moment . . . until you are shown the new medical techniques by which these goals are attained! They are:

1. The most powerful "age-reversing mechanism" known to man . . . which takes exactly six minutes per day . . . may be done by any man or woman, no matter how poor their health today . . . and which is bluntly recognized by one of the leading physicians in this book to give far better "youthifying" results — far faster — than even "cell therapy" treatments costing hundreds of dollars apiece!

2. A direct attack on the stored-up emotional poisons in your body that eat away strength and youth like internal acid, and replace them with never-flagging fatigue! This incredibly simple technique drains out those poisons, and that deadly fatigue, in approximately ten of the most revivifying minutes you have ever spent!

And, finally —

3. A new way to lose weight — not a diet — designed to change your present suicidal eating habits in exactly 48 hours! And, to break at last the vicious fat-multiplying cycle inside your body, that causes you to put on more weight, from less food, than your thin friends.

Let Us Repeat Again: These Medical Techniques Are So Powerful That They Actually REVERSE THE AGING PROCESS — WITHOUT DRUGS!

They cause you, quite simply, to grow stronger and not weaker, as you grow older! And here is the medical documentation to prove it:

In tests conducted at a leading University and Medical School in Southern California, it was discovered that life-prolongation, accomplished this way, not only added decades to potential human life spans, but — even more important — also produced vastly increased vitality and vigor, as well as startlingly heightened resistance to dread "senile decline!" (Reported on page 129 of this thrilling new book.)

As a result of scientific observations and experiments conducted in several different locations in the United States (as well as in Europe and Soviet Russia), it was definitely established that these techniques will enable almost any individual to live beyond 90 . . . and even beyond 100 healthy, productive, thoroughly enjoyable years — even if he or she had tragically short-lived parents or grandparents! In other words, disastrous heredity can now be overcome! (See page 36.)

At a leading Gerontology Research Center on the Pacific Coast, its president bluntly stated that a single one of the techniques given to you here had (in essence): " . . . reversed the aging process and over a period of time restored the characteristics of youth to the bodies of middle-aged men!" (See Page 129.)

And one of his colleagues, discussing the same simple procedure, went so far as to state that it: " . . . relieves joint stiffness, lowers the blood pressure, and reduces the amount of fat in the body tissues. It acts like a miracle drug, and it's free for the doing!" (Italics ours — see page 130.)

But All This Research Documentation Is Only The PROLOGUE To The Real Meat . . . Of This Revolutionary New Book!
FOR NOW THE YOUTH-RESTORING PRINCIPLES LEARNED ALL OVER THE WORLD ARE PUT TO WORK — INSTANTLY — FOR YOU!

How to lose weight without counting calories — by harnessing the same exact forces which made you overweight in the first place! (It is not unusual, with these methods, to lose 15 and more pounds the first week — up to 10 pounds the second week — and a good hundred pounds or more, in as little as 15 weeks. And the weight stays off — for decades!)

How to add 10 . . . 20 . . . perhaps even 30 glowing years to your life, simply by avoiding the everyday "Life-Traps" that make you grow old too fast!

How a careful examination of your eye can tell you, with unerring accuracy, if you've eaten the wrong foods that night for dinner . . .

and therefore have to give them up for a few days till your body's digestive powers restore themselves to the correct balance!

Little-known stress-on-the-heart Number 1 . . . that kills unwary thousands every year . . . and can be prevented simply by reading a single sentence on page 70!

When you must eat . . . and eat . . . and eat if you really want to lose weight!

"Hungry enzymes" that now infest your body! They are the real reason all past attempts to peel off ugly fat have been such torture for you! And you can "command" your body to destroy them — for good — as simply as this! (See page 82.)

Why most people's muscles simply "melt away" as they grow older! (No wonder "old age" to them means ever-growing weakness!) And how you can stop that muscle-melting process overnight . . . and replace it with vibrant new strength!

And More! And More! And More! Like This —

What really causes vigor to drain out of the "aging" body! A simple fluid that if the body gives up too much of, it then dies of old age! And how you can "pump that vital cell-nourishing fluid" right back into your body . . . actually increase your body capacity to utilize by as much as 133% . . . in just a few thrilling minutes every day!

How to exercise your heart! Anyone — no matter what age — can do it! And prevent the greatest tragedy of all — premature heart attack!

Read the line in the middle of page 144 as though your life depended upon it! Because, if you've ever worried about killing your own heart through the worst possible error you can make — this one line will show you how to avoid it . . . forever!

World's easiest exercise program — for men and women who are pitifully out of shape!

How to avoid the man-made diseases! And save your body, and your nerves, at exactly the same time!

What your sleep, or lack of it, is really telling you! And how to ease yourself into a good night's rest again!

What your fingers tell you that can save your life! Listen to them . . . obey their command . . . and you may be able to out-run your own youngster!

If your blood pressure is soaring, you must do this, right now!

World's most effective weapon against demolished nerves! Gets you back to loving life, instead of hating it, in just about ten blessed minutes!

No more nervous breakdowns! And no more un-necessary heart attacks (or strokes!) The technique shown to you on page 197 may banish them from your life — for good!

How to add ten years to your life, by avoiding one little fatal mistake — at night! Before you go to sleep!

How to laugh at old age — at least till you're ninety! A simple program so effective that it may actually cause strangers to think that you are your best friends' grown children!

And Yours To Prove — In Its Entirety — For 30 Days, Entirely At Our Risk!

The choice is yours. This is a book for people who mean business. It costs you nothing! We take all the risk! Fair enough? Why not send in the coupon — TODAY!

SPECIAL ADDED BONUS SECTION

How to survive a heart attack! Why so many heart attacks are the "silent" type, that kill without the victim even being aware he has been seriously ill before! The one warning signal you simply CAN'T ignore! Why HALF of all heart attack victims ACTUALLY KILL THEMSELVES because they just don't know what to do!

Rod McKuen— Poet, Songwriter, Singer: How Life Finally Forced Me to Be Myself

By Andamo Crater

FAMILY WEEKLY: With all those hundreds of concerts you do—do you ever get stage fright?

McKUEEN: Never. If people pay to see me, we must want to see each other. So what do I have to be afraid of? And I also don't believe in bad audiences. I think you give bad performances. If you don't get to your audience, it's your fault, not theirs. You just have to work that much harder. I go crazy out there sometimes. After I do a few songs, if I feel like I'm not getting to them, I just go bananas. And I work my tail off; I change all the songs right in mid-stream, switch things around like mad."

FW: Can you tell when you're finally going in the right direction?

McKUEEN: Oh yeah—if you can't, you shouldn't be a performer. You know, this year, I will have done 240 concerts in 16 countries. One day, I did three lectures, and for about the last 12 or 13 days I've done two concerts a day.

FW: You only began to make it in the late sixties, but I seem to remember your records started showing up as early as 1958 or 1959.

McKUEEN: That's right. My first album—"Songs for a Lazy Afternoon"—came out about then. I had a whole different voice then. I lost it singing rock and roll. I had done this rock and roll record as a gag, and after that I found myself doing these concerts. I didn't know how to sing, so I was singing from my throat. I did 80 concerts in eight weeks. By the end of that time, my throat was like hamburger. The doctor said I would never sing again. He also said, "You'll be lucky if you ever talk again." And sure enough, after a few days, I lost my voice completely. It was six months before I could actually talk.

FW: What did you do then?

McKUEEN: Well, I went back to California. And I was in the hospital for the first six weeks. I thought to myself: If I can't write and sing the kind of things I want to, I don't want to do anything at all. And it was only then that I began to be successful. But I knew there was no point in my doing rock and roll songs, because there were a lot of other people doing them better than me. And I couldn't say anything within the medium that couldn't be said better by somebody else. So I decided I was going to go my own way.

FW: When did you feel you were getting hold of your audience?

"I'm going to be charitable and not name them, but I think there are singers who sell hundreds of thousands of albums who are afraid to get inside a song and really work it."

McKUEEN: It was spooky and strange. It was as though one day you were sort of there, and the next day you were there! I would love to put my finger on that day, but I can't.

FW: Weren't you doing records of your poetry a dozen or so years ago? I remember one called "Beatsville."

McKUEEN: I've got to tell you a great story about that album. In fact, there were two albums. The other one was called "Time of Desire." I made them around 1959, and they just sat there on the shelf. When I became a success, the company took those two albums and turned them into 17 albums! Would you believe that?

FW: Why do you write songs?

McKUEEN: I think you should have an awfully good excuse to write a song. There should be only three reasons for writing anything. One is to have fun—the most self-indulgent reason. The second one is this—either to write about something nobody else will write about and do it in an intelligent and sensible way, or to write about something that everyone writes about and to write about it differently. Then there's the third reason—the paramount reason for me—I write about people's inability to communicate with each other. And that, to me, is almost a mission in life. I believe in one-to-one communication very strongly. I believe it's the answer to our ills—all of them.

FW: What singers do you like the best?

McKUEEN: I'm crazy about Mary Travers. I like Judy Collins and Neil Diamond very much—and, of course, there's Sinatra. I think in my lifetime, there have been two real innovators in music. Sinatra, because he sang on the vowels and because he made every single word understandable. And the Beatles, because they made a form of music, rock, acceptable whether played by the raunchiest rock group or the most sophisticated symphony orchestra.

FW: Do you feel you have been strongly influenced by anyone?

McKUEEN: I hate being compared with another writer or singer, but I think you can't help being influenced. We all learned from Sinatra—as writers and as singers. But certainly all Americans have been influenced by Walt Whitman, whether we know it or not. In music, we've been influenced by Aaron Copland, whether we know it or not. It just happens.

FW: Who are you working with these days?

McKUEEN: I'm making an album with Hildegard Knef, and another one with Marlene Dietrich. You know, my favorite singers are always people who supposedly can't sing—but who are incredible singers. I love Lotte Lenya's singing and Fred Astaire's.

FW: What does it mean when people say somebody like Fred Astaire can't sing?

McKUEEN: It means they can't sing by any musicologist's definition. You know—bel canto. What annoys me even more are the singers who can sing and don't. I'm going to be charitable and not name them, but I think there are singers who sell hundreds of thousands of albums who are afraid to get inside a song and really work it. You know, when Sinatra came to do his album of my songs, he worked incredibly hard. He knew every single song when he came in—there are some very difficult songs to sing in that album. We did the talk songs in 90 minutes, when it would have taken most people three to five hours.

He's a remarkable man.

According to the sports editors of FAMILY WEEKLY newspapers, a certain announcer on UCLA football telecasts this fall will be talking about the exploits of the best college quarterback in the nation.

That sportscaster is Tom Harmon, one of the greatest of all collegiate halfbacks during his days at the University of Michigan and winner of the coveted Heisman Trophy in 1940. He now handles the microphone for KTLA, the Los Angeles television station that carries all UCLA games.

The quarterback whose feats Harmon will be describing, no doubt in glowing yet controlled terms, is Tom's own son, Mark Harmon, a blond-haired senior who stands six feet tall and weighs 185 pounds. Mark has been voted to the quarterback position on FAMILY WEEKLY's third annual All-America team, a 48-player squad chosen by sports editors of the newspapers that bring you this magazine.

When all other means of scoring fail, our first offensive team can call on Tennessee's junior place-kicking whiz, Ricky Townsend, who kicked 12 field goals and converted all 31 of his extra-point tries last season. Kicker on the defensive team is Greg Gantt of Alabama, from the same Southeastern Conference as Townsend.

In separate balloting, young Harmon, who guided the Bruins to a fine 8-3 record in 1972, was elected the country's best collegiate passer in a close three-way race, narrowly edging out Pacific Eight rival Mike Boryla of Stanford, and left-handed junior David Humm of Nebraska. Boryla is also the son of a famous sports father, Vince Boryla, a former college and pro basketball star who is now general manager of the ABA's Utah Stars.

Harmon, who ran UCLA's wide-open wishbone attack to near-perfection a year ago, completed 30 of 70 passes for six touchdowns, and ran for 444 yards and seven more touchdowns. In gaining his berth on the All-America first team, Mark beat out another running-passing quarterback, Condredge Holloway, a junior at Tennessee.

The other winners in the "best" voting—to select the top runner and lineman in the nation—won their first-team berths with ease. Anthony Davis of the University of Southern California, last year's national champion and UCLA's cross-town rival, received an overwhelming 80 percent of the votes cast for running back, and was acclaimed top runner in the land by an even wider margin. In both cases, the runner-up to Davis, a 5-9, 190-pound junior, was Arizona State senior Woody Green.

Lucious Selmon of Oklahoma drew almost 90 percent of the votes for the first-team berth at middle guard, and the 6-1, 224-pound senior also was elected the best lineman in the country by an almost 20-vote margin over Notre Dame's prodigious sophomore defensive tackle, 265-pound Steve Niehaus. John Hicks, Ohio State's 255-pound offensive tackle, also received considerable support in the "best lineman" category.

Southern Cal's Davis, who likes to be called A. D. rather than Anthony, and absolutely never answers to "Tony," had a serious automobile accident last January that nearly ended his athletic career. Davis suffered a cut (but not severed)

Achilles tendon, and a punctured right kneecap, plus numerous cuts and abrasions. But he healed quickly and demonstrated he would be back in the Trojan lineup this fall when he batted .360 and stole four bases while performing as a utility outfielder for the Southern Cal baseball team in 15 games last spring.

A. D.'s athletic forte, however, is football. Trojan Coach John McKay started him slowly last season, and in the first seven games of the year Davis gained a relatively meager 356 yards. Then, in the next two games, he ran 206 and 195 yards respectively against Oregon and Washington State. In the regular season finale against a tough Notre Dame squad, Southern Cal romped, 45-23, and A. D. scored all six of his team's touchdowns, two on kickoff returns of 97 and 96 yards. When Southern Cal completed its undefeated 12-0 season by crushing Ohio State, 42-17, in the Rose Bowl, Davis rolled for 157 more yards on the ground for a season's total of 1,191 and a per carry average of 5.8 yards.

Oklahoma's Selmon is the second consecutive middle guard from the Big Eight to be voted the nation's best lineman in the FAMILY WEEKLY All-America balloting. In 1972, Selmon played in the shadow of Nebraska's Rich Glover, last year's "best lineman" and a nearly unanimous choice to post-season All-America teams. This year Selmon should direct more attention toward himself.

Lucious has two younger brothers also playing football for Oklahoma—LeRoy, a defensive tackle, and Dewey, a backup middle guard. Lucious made 83 tackles in 1972, ten of them resulting in 48 yards in losses by the opposition. He also broke up two passes and recovered two fumbles. Selmon was a defensive tackle for the Sooners as a sophomore two years ago, but was moved to middle guard in spring practice of 1972.

Southern California, with "best runner" Davis, will get a chance to face the other two FAMILY WEEKLY "bests" this season. The Trojans host Oklahoma for a night game on September 29, and meet UCLA on November 24 in the last game

IN THIS GRIND-EM-OUT WORLD, ISN'T IT NICE TO KNOW SOME PEOPLE REFUSE TO GRIND-EM-OUT?

We're sticklers about how Kent is made.

That's why Kent is probably the most quality-tested cigarette made.

We try to get rid of any taste-robbing imperfections before a Kent ever sees the light of a match. (Over 200 different quality checks in the manufacturing end, alone.)

But Kent quality goes beyond that.

We go to 3 continents, 4 countries and 10 states to find the right kind of tobaccos for the milder Kent blend.

To complement this blend, we even invented our own filter, the famous Micronite filter — to smooth the flavor of Kent.

Why are we so adamant about how Kent is made?

Because, that way we can give you the mild, smooth taste that makes Kent what it is: America's quality cigarette.

of the season and what could be a classic Pacific Eight showdown.

There are five Trojans on FAMILY WEEKLY's first team, giving Southern Cal the largest representation of any school. Joining Davis as first-team selections are wide receiver Lynn Swann, defensive end James Sims, and defensive back Artimus Parker, all seniors, and linebacker Richard Wood, a junior.

Texas has the second largest contingent on the first team, including Roosevelt Leaks, the junior fullback who won his position by nearly 40 votes over UCLA senior James McAlister, who also is one of the nation's finest long jumpers in track. Center Bill Wyman and guard Don Crosslin are the other Longhorns on the first offensive squad, and Texas' Glen Gaspard makes the defensive team at one of the three linebacking spots.

Notre Dame is represented by three players on the first team. Mike Townsend, a senior, drew more votes for a defensive back berth than anyone else. In the closest race for any position, Frank Pomarico, another Notre Dame senior, won one of the guard spots, with Crosslin of Texas right behind. Tyler Lafauci of Louisiana State and Bon Boatwright of Oklahoma State were only a few votes back and made the second team.

Niehaus, the sophomore defensive tackle, is the third Notre Dame player on our first team. Under the new eligibility rule permitting freshmen to play varsity football at most of the nation's colleges, Steve made the Fighting Irish regular squad last year and was having a brilliant season when a knee injury sidelined him after four games. Expert opinion contends that Niehaus still could be the finest defensive lineman ever produced in the proud football history at South Bend.

Penn State placed two men on the first team, tight end Dan Natale on offense and tackle Randy Crowder on defense. Ohio State placed Hicks at offensive tackle, and a big linebacker, Randy Gradishar, on the first team. Alabama's 6-6 defensive end John Croyle is the tallest man on either the first or second team, and the Crimson Tide is also represented by punter Greg Gantt. Nebraska, famous for its giant offensive linemen over the years, has another topflight performer in this tradition: 247-pound tackle Daryl White.

Jack Alvarez of Kentucky has a wide receiver's spot on the first team, while Jimmy Allen, a defensive back at UCLA, rounds out the secondary.

How the All-America Voting Went

Here's the way the FAMILY WEEKLY All-America college football team for 1973 developed, position-by-position:

Quarterback: The wishbone offense, which places a premium on a quarterback who can run as well as pass, is the most popular in American college football today. Mark Harmon of UCLA, who runs the Bruins' wishbone attack, and another versatile quarterback, Condredge Holloway of Tennessee, ran one-two for the quarterback job. Nebraska's David Humm, a fine passer, was only a few votes behind them. Harmon, who also is a fine passer but apparently was favored as the first-team quarterback because of his all-round versatility, was voted "best passer," with Mike Boryla of Stanford a close second. Humm was third in this category, only two votes behind Boryla.

Running back: Southern Cal's A. D. Davis won by a landslide, with Woody Green of Arizona State second and Charley Davis of Colorado slightly behind him. A. D. won by an even wider margin in the "best runner" voting.

Fullback: Roosevelt Leaks won over UCLA's James McAlister, with Michigan's Ed Shuttlesworth a strong challenger.

Tight end: In a close race that wasn't determined until the final ballots were counted, Dan Natale of Penn State edged J. V. Cain of Colorado. Henry Childs of Kansas State was another vote-getter.

Wide receiver: Lynn Swann of Southern Cal and Jack Alvarez of Kentucky won top berths. Alvarez held off Danny Buggs of West Virginia and Air Force's Frank Murphy by only a few votes. Bob Revelle of Nebraska and Bill Buckley of Mississippi State had support.

Offensive tackle: Daryl White of Nebraska and John Hicks of Ohio State were front-runners all the way, finishing ahead of Buddy Brown of Alabama and Eddie Foster of Oklahoma. Charlie Getty of Penn State was fifth in the voting.

Offensive guards: Frank Pomarico of Notre Dame finished way ahead of the field. Texas' Don Crosslin nosed out both Tyler Lafauci of LSU and Bon Boatwright of Oklahoma State for the other first-team guard berth. John Houser of Arizona State and Bob Wolfe of Nebraska both had strong support.

Center: Bill Wyman of Texas and William McDonald of Colorado finished one-two and nosed out another contender, Mike McNeely of Syracuse.

Place-kicker: Ricky Townsend of Tennessee was first, nudging Rich Sanger of Nebraska; Fred Lima of Colorado was third.

Defensive ends: James Sims of Southern Cal and John Croyle of Alabama finished ahead of Mike Truax of Tulane and Van DeCree of Ohio State. Malcolm Minnick of Texas, Orrin Olsen of Brigham Young and Steve Manstedt of Nebraska all were in contention.

Defensive tackles: Steve Niehaus of Notre Dame, Randy Crowder of Penn State, Steve Cassidy of LSU and Benny Sivley of Auburn finished in that order. Robert Pulliam of Tennessee and Dave Gallagher of Michigan had strong support.

Middle guard: Oklahoma's Lucious Selmon was way ahead of Tony Christiani of Miami (Fla.) in the first-team balloting; Paul Vellano of Maryland and Mike Phillips of Cornell both had backers. Selmon won the "best lineman" designation by 18 votes over Steve Niehaus, Notre Dame's defensive tackle. Others attracting votes were John Hicks of Ohio State and Daryl White of Nebraska, both offensive tackles, and Randy Gradishar, Ohio State linebacker.

Linebackers: Richard Wood of Southern Cal and Randy Gradishar of Ohio State had a wide margin over all other candidates. Glen Gaspard of Texas earned a spot on the first team by a few-vote margin over Warren Capone of LSU. Chuck Strickland of Alabama, Ed O'Neill of Penn State, and Michigan State's Ray Nester were next in the balloting.

Defensive backs: Mike Townsend of Notre Dame, the top choice, was well ahead of Artimus Parker of Southern Cal, who, in turn, was well ahead of Jimmy Allen of UCLA. Randy Rhino of Georgia Tech, who narrowly missed the first team, finished ahead of David Langner of Auburn. Paul Hayner of Michigan State and Harry Harrison of Mississippi were close behind.

Punter: Greg Gant of Alabama made the first team by turning back Michigan State's Bill Simpson. In third place was Rusty Jackson of LSU.

©1973 R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

In this picture, everybody has a gimmick... almost everybody. Try picking the one who doesn't go along. 1. No way. He's Gerry Atric, over-the-hill hippie. Irons his hair twice daily. Cigarettes taste just as flat. Gimmick: Watching bowling pins "do their own thing, man." 2. Naomi Glowsoul. Gimmick: Uses so much body english that police have raided the place four times 3. Nope. It's Angie "The Arm" Kugelman. Throws so hard three automatic pinsetting machines have quit. Smokes cigarettes so heavily filtered, he's like a man giving mouth-to-mouth resuscitation to a rock. 4. Right. He just likes bowling, not gimmicks. Likes his cigarette honest and no-nonsense, too. Camel Filters. Easy and good tasting. 5. Zooty Smith. Gimmick: Has worn same good luck clothes since he broke 125 in 1942. Smokes war surplus cigarettes and saves the tinfoil. 6. Whiz Kid Pringle. Developed math formula to bowl a perfect strike. Unfortunately releases ball on backswing.

Camel Filters. CAMEL
They're not for everybody
(but they could be for you).

20 mg. "tar," 1.3 mg. nicotine av. per cigarette. FTC Report FEB. '73.

Turkey Wings: A Dollar-Saving Idea for the Barbecue

CRANBERRY BARBECUED TURKEY WINGS

- 8 (about 6 lbs.) frozen turkey wings, thawed*
- 1½ qts. water
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 onion, quartered
- 8 peppercorns
- ½ teaspoon thyme leaves
- 1 carrot, quartered
- 1 stalk celery with leaves
- Cranberry Barbecue Sauce:
- 1 can (1 lb.) cranberry sauce
- 1 cup ketchup or chili sauce
- ½ cup water
- ¼ cup firmly packed light-brown sugar
- ¼ cup butter or margarine
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon garlic powder
- ¼ teaspoon chili powder

1. Place turkey wings in large 6-8-qt. kettle or Dutch oven. Add remaining ingredients. Bring to boiling. Reduce heat and simmer uncovered 1-1½ hours, or until tender.
2. Remove turkey wings from broth, wrap and refrigerate. Pour broth into container, cover and refrigerate. (Use for soup.)
3. Make Cranberry Barbecue Sauce: In 2-qt. saucepan combine all ingredients.
4. Bring mixture to boiling, stirring to break up cranberry sauce. Reduce heat and simmer uncovered 10-15 minutes, stirring occasionally.
5. Place cooked turkey wings on grill, 4 inches from hot coals. Brush with Cranberry Barbecue Sauce.
6. Broil for about 15 minutes. Turn, brush with barbecue sauce and continue cooking for another 7-10 minutes, basting frequently. When wings are sizzling hot and crusty, serve.

Makes 8 servings

*Turkey wings are sold frozen in 1½-1¾ lb. packages, 2 wings per package.

CRUNCHY CHEESE TOMATOES

- 1 cup herb-seasoned stuffing mix
- 1 tablespoon freeze-dried chives
- ¼ cup shredded sharp Cheddar cheese
- ½ teaspoon ground black pepper
- ¼ cup butter or margarine, melted
- 4 underripe or green tomatoes, halved

1. Preheat oven to 400°F. In medium bowl combine stuffing mix, chives, cheese and pepper. Add butter, toss to combine.
2. Line a shallow baking pan with foil. Spoon about 2 tablespoons crumb mixture on top of each tomato half.
3. Bake about 15 minutes, or until tomatoes are fork-tender and topping is golden brown.

Makes 8 servings

This week, Food Editor Marilyn Hansen prepares turkey wings for the barbecue. "With prices what they are," says Marilyn, "turkey wings—which are available frozen in most supermarkets—are a good answer for many families. (Don't confuse them with chicken wings: Turkey wings are surprisingly meaty and filling.)"

What in the World!

JAMES BROLIN
"Libbers aren't direct"

James Brolin, costar of TV's "Marcus Welby M.D.," talks about Women's Lib: "Somebody asked me what I thought of a woman directing, and I said I think it's fantastic if she can put out the product; but in the meantime, she may lose a lot of her femininity and the thing that makes her attractive to men—which, in the end, is what many liberationists are after. They're after the attention of men, in a sense. That may be a generalization, but to tell you the truth, I think that Women's Lib is not a direct honesty. Sometimes, the Libbers have appeared very frivolous and expressed themselves in terms of not having their cigarettes lit, their doors opened and other things like that, but that's not what they're really about. It's just a way to get attention for other things underneath."

"Astute physicians have for years known empirically that there is a connection between nutrition and mood. Patients who complained of depression, anxiety, irritability, or just general confused thinking, frequently reveal that they are not getting enough of one or more basic nutrients. When these nutrients are restored to the diet, complaints of problematic moods vanish. . . . If a nutritional deficiency exists, the cells of the brain and the central and peripheral nervous systems may function below capacity. Thus, while it may not be literally true that we are what we eat, we are undeniably affected by food, in mental as well as physical ways." From "Depression, A Layman's Guide to the Symptoms and Cures," by Paul Gillette and Marie Hornbeck (Outerbridge and Lazard, $5.95).

Only 477,000 tons, dripping wet

How big is big? For the biggest ship in the world, the "Globtik Tokyo," big means almost a quarter of a mile long, and 79 tennis courts would not be too much for this ship to accommodate. Constructed in Japan, this monster tanker is the biggest moving thing ever built by man. She weighs only a light 477,000 tons deadweight, and her deck area is 25,000 square yards. She carries a crew of 38 men and has a service speed of 15 knots.

ARMOUR'S ARMOURY By Richard Armour

CHAIN LETTER

Our bank has pens its patrons use;
On tables they are found.
The pens cannot be carried off,
For they with chains are bound.
Some, filling out deposit slips,
I note reveal disgust
To think that chains should bind these pens
And show such lack of trust.
But my reaction's different,
As I am glad to tell:
I'm glad the bank's like this and hope
My money's chained as well.

I was showing my nine-year-old son the bridesmaid's dress his sister was going to wear in their cousin's wedding.

"What do I have to do in the wedding?" he asked. "Nothing," I replied. "We'll just sit together and watch." "Good," he sighed. "I thought I might have to be a pallbearer or something!"

Candidate for the "Worst Watergate Joke of the Year":

A large reptile slid up out of the Florida Everglades, wanting nothing more to do with his former friends.

"What's the matter?" asked his swamp friends. "Why do you spurn us?"

Drug education should stress attitudes, change

Attitudes and changes in attitudes are difficult to measure, but if children are to acquire a healthy regard for drugs, alcohol and tobacco, that's what education in that subject area should be all about.

That's the indication which can be gleaned from a recent evaluation of a drug program which has been conducted in Outagamie County schools for the past three years.

The curriculum and the testing of it was done by two men from Cooperative Educational Service Agency (CESA) 8. Thomas Hogan and Jack Hamilton, drug education in-service leaders for the agency, developed an instrument of testing the children in K-12 after a three-year program was completed in the schools.

About 1,400 children and youths from nine schools, private and parochial, participated.

The program was initially funded as a pilot program through Title III of the Elementary and Secondary Educational Act, for one year. When the grant ceased, Outagamie County became the lone sponsor.

Involved are teachers and students in Appleton, Kimberly, Little Chute, Freedom, New London, Kaukauna, Seymour, Shiocton and Hortonville.

According to the two men, the program has always emphasized development of self-concept, a sound decision making framework and values.

Drug information is dealt with in the classroom but not overemphasized, they said.

Yet, one of them commented, "you never know how much good you have been doing until you have given it a chance to operate and then do some testing."

The program was broken down into three areas: K-3 (primary) in which personal hygiene was stressed; 3-6 (intermediate) which dealt more with attitudes and changes, and junior and senior high, which was involved with factual information.

The findings bring out a number of interesting facts which may not be necessarily surprising, but which substantiate to the leaders that they have been going in the right direction with their program.

One discovery is that primary pupils show more improvement than any other grade level, which has led the men to the conclusion that the most time and manpower efforts should be placed at the kindergarten level through grade 6, where social practices have not yet been imbedded.

"This is obviously where maximum success can be achieved in forming and reinforcing positive, socially acceptable attitudes," Hogan said.

He was, at the same time, alluding to the fact that though the evaluation indicates that older students are not as positive in their attitudes, their reputation in adult circles is worse than it should be.

The study shows that secondary students largely show negative attitudes toward all types of illegal drugs. Also surprising is the fact that very few (22 per cent) of the group thought to use it the most, favor the legalization of marijuana.

Only 3.6 per cent of those tested favored the legalization of LSD.

Similarly, few students expressed any desire to associate with drug users and large numbers claimed they had never used any types of illegal drugs. Nearly 86 per cent claimed they had not tried marijuana; 96 per cent, that they had never used LSD; 93 per cent, that they had never sniffed glue.

Furthermore, it was pointed out by the two authors, more than 80 per cent judge illegal drugs to be unsafe.

"But attitudes toward social drugs are quite different," Hogan stated. "Starting on the fourth grade level, the pupils consistently indicated positive attitudes toward alcohol and tobacco, probably because both are considered socially acceptable and very likely used in the home."

Factual evidence, Hamilton added, indicates that students increased their knowledge of the dangers of using these legal drugs, "but on the attitude tests, the students responded quite a bit more favorably toward the use of them."

In contrast to the illegal drug figures, nearly 75 per cent of the secondary students thought alcohol should be legally available. Only 16.8 per cent said they have never used alcohol and half that said they had never had beer.

Only 20 per cent ranked alcohol as an unsafe drug.

"While many authorities view alcohol as the most unsafe drug of all, its common acceptance in our society makes most students see it as either neutral or safe," Hogan pointed out.

"In short, teaching that alcohol is a dangerous or unsafe drug runs counter to our society's practices," the other team leader stated.

The findings, both educators stress, underscore the importance of dealing with values and attitudes as well as information in the classroom. Problems of group pressure, the impact of the mass media and adult acceptance of social drugs should be dealt with in addition to the students' self-images and how they go about making decisions that are important, they add.

"Student attitudes will not be changed by facts alone. Our findings state that clearly and stress that most time and manpower efforts should be placed at the K-6 level. They also point out the importance of paying closer attention to the potential abuse of socially accepted drugs," they advise parents and teachers.

Among the other pieces of advice, the two men feel that in the senior high level, values should be the central point of concern.

The county grant currently runs through December, which gives them a little more time to try to incorporate their findings into a new curriculum and "sell" it to teachers.

Recruiting mission

Bishop Thomas Reilly, center, is flanked by the Rev. Donald Rose, left, and the Rev. Michael Clifford as they discuss the work that is ahead for the bishop's diocese in the

we are making great progress," he said.

The bishop, a Boston native who was ordained 40 years ago, explained that the Church in Latin America is on the side of the oppressed. In the 19th century, the Church was generally conservative and considered to be allied with the military and the government' he said. It was thought to fear revolutionary forces and prevent social change.

"Now," added Rose, there is a new "theory of liberation." The churches in Latin America are becoming independent of old European thought.

The bishop did not consider the activities in the republic as being political involvement for the Church. "It is not a question of joining the Republicans or Democrats. This is a question of human rights" he explained.

Their three-week visit has hopefully strengthened relations between the Green Bay diocese and the Banica mission in the republic. The diocese had established the mission at the request of Reilly and Bishop Aloysius Wycislo.

The mission at San Juan de la Maguana on the Haitian border is one of five dioceses of the Dominican Republic. It was described by Rose as basically rural country with a central church and radiating missions. "Some missions are a five-day round trip. Sometimes we have to travel by jeep, other times by mule," he said.

The mission also offers something to the Green Bay diocese, continued Rose. "It is a way of making people aware of new ideas in the world."

"It is also a new concept to have diocesan priests used in this mission work instead of the particular orders like the Capuchins, Redemptorists (to which Bishop Reilly belongs) or the Norbertines. We are opening up" the Church and opportunities.

press releases a week when Congress is in session, has distributed a questionnaire to all postal patrons in the 13-county district, to some 150,000 households, and has issued newsletters mailed to constituents.

During the current congressional recess, Froehlich returned to the district, took a few days off at his lake cottage in Florence County, then began a round of dinner speeches, "office hours" in various communities to meet individually with constituents, county fairs and similar business.

His latest newsletter, issued shortly before the recess, declared his intention to visit each of the 13 counties. It also is beneficial to his fortunes in the campaign a year away.

He discussed in the newsletter his amendment to the new farm bill authorizing the secretary of agriculture to order prices increased on agricultural products if government price controls are causing a shortage, as in the case of beef; his role in shepherding the bill to restore reservation status to Menominee County through the House; his involvement in a GOP study of campaign law reform; an arthritis booklet he is offering free to interested constituents; his efforts to prevent closing of the U.S. Coast Guard Station at Plum Island; his efforts to restore outgoing Sunday postal service in Sturgeon Bay, Kewaunee and Algoma and the announcement of resumed planning of a new post office in Appleton; a bill he offered to increase veterans' pension benefits. The newsletter concludes with his plans during the recess and congratulations to Crandon and Tilleda on celebrating key anniversaries as communities.

Not mentioned were several efforts on behalf of communities engaged in projects involving federal funds or facing problems against which a congressman's influence might be helpful, such as a library and an airport expansion project at Sturgeon Bay.

While helpful vehicles for impressing voters in that area, similar ways to be conspicuously helpful haven't emerged in Brown County, where he would like to win next time, or Outagamie County, second in population in the district behind Brown, where he did not lead by as large a margin as he would have liked.

Much of his visible efforts to help the district has affected the northern counties, which he carried handily in the election. In the populous southern counties, the opportunities just haven't been there.

He questioned, during an interview,

Car goes into lake, man escapes injury

BROTHERTOWN — A Fond du Lac man escaped injury Saturday night after his car plunged down a 20-foot embankment into Lake Winnebago. Louis D. Schwartz, 27, was going west on the harbor road when his car failed to hold a curve. The accident occurred at about 8:15 p.m., and Schwartz was alone in the car.

Today's chuckle

Saying "Gesundheit" doesn't help a cold, but it's about as good as anything the doctors have come up with.

how effective the activities of Cornell are. Many, Froehlich suggested, receive little notice by the public. People have been writing letters to the editor for years, he observed dryly.

He said he has considered answering one or two of the letters, when a supporter in Brown County urged striking back. But he said the idea was scrapped. He didn't want to get into a letter writing contest that could become interminable, he said.

Cornell is not his only worry. Watergate is a big question mark in its potential impact on Republican candidates next year, if only because nobody can predict what will have happened between now and the election.

One fact that both the Froehlich and Democratic camps are aware of is that in elections between presidential campaigns, the party out of power in the White House tends to gain seats in Congress.

But Froehlich pointed out that there will be 50,000 fewer voters at the polls next year, also because it is an "off year." And nobody knows whose voters they will be, though Democrats have a tendency toward poorer turnouts than Republicans in such elections.

The makeup of the statewide ballot is another factor that could have an impact. At present, there is uncertainty as to whom will run as Republicans for governor and other statewide offices. But the Democrats seem likely to have a strong ticket headed by Gov. Patrick Lucey and including Sen. Gaylord Nelson, against whom no strong GOP challenger has yet emerged.

Finally there is the issue of the economy and its employment. There is increasing belief among observers that this, rather than the Watergate scandal, will be the key factor in deciding the elections. Cornell said in a telephone interview that he intends in coming months to hit hard at the economic issues, blaming the Republican Nixon Administration.

Against this backdrop, Froehlich has a terse, calm reply to the reporter who asks how he is dealing with his circumstances.

"Doing our job as congressman," he answered.

German prosperity awes Ripon professor

Aug. 26, 1973

B-3

Sunday Post-Crescent,

Appleton-Neenah-Menasha, Wis.

RIPON — Most West Germans, "whether they'd admit it or not, would agree that America's Watergate scandal has affected currency exchange rates and was one of the reasons for devaluation of the dollar," according to a Ripon College faculty member who recently returned from a more than half-year stay in the Federal Republic of Germany.

But Thomas E. Jones, assistant professor of German, emphasized that Watergate "is by no means the only reason" for the dollar's troubles.

A round of devaluation had just begun when Jones, a member of the Ripon faculty since 1963, arrived in West Germany Jan. 2. It was his fourth trip to the Federal Republic.

"I thought then, and I still think, that there is some anti-Americanism involved in currency decisions which have led to ever greater devaluation of the dollar."

Jones said he believes he detected a bit of anti-Americanism in televised speeches by Helmut Schmidt, West Germany's minister of finance.

"I'm certain," he added, "that Schmidt would deny he's anti-American, but I feel equally sure that most people would agree that he is to a little extent."

Although Watergate has had extensive front page coverage in the West German press, the German people do not regard the matter as seriously as Americans.

Jones recalls seeing a Bonn discotheque which has been renamed "The Watergate."

"There it was, in letters a foot high, 'The Watergate,' which may symbolize, in a way, that Germans aren't taking it all that seriously."

Jones, who returned to the United States in mid-July, was in the West German capital of Bonn as director of Ripon College's annual junior year abroad program for American students who have some proficiency in the German language.

Open to qualified students from other schools as well as to Ripon undergraduates, the Bonn University-based program is designed to give young people an opportunity to know West Germany and the Germans at first hand, and to improve their language skill.

"Americans don't have a tradition as, say, the Dutch do of being multi-lingual," Jones observed, "and I think the evidence is piling up that we're going to have to change that."

He finds fluency in a foreign language "a strong selling point" for college graduates hoping to land jobs with American businesses which have dealings with other countries.

Jones, who visited West Germany for the first time in the post-war year of 1949 and again in 1951-52 and 1965-66, reported that this year's trip "drove home the point very strongly that changes are fantastically deep and sweeping."

He draws a picture of a booming German economy, prosperity, full employment with jobs enough even for many foreigners, and a bustling, busy and forward looking population. But along with the good life in West Germany go some problems, including high prices and an inflation rate of about 8.5 per cent as of mid-July.

"We're not sought after as Americans as we once were. We're not so interesting to Germans as we were."

The Ripon professor said that on his first trip in 1949 he found the Germans fascinated by America, Americans and American technology.

Today, he observed, German business executives are no longer looking to the United States for industrial and technical know-how.

"That's all over now. So far as I can see, we no longer have anything to teach Germany."

"The economy is simply booming out of sight and the West German people are growing with it. The people are so well dressed and so well off," he added. "There are so many autos and TV sets."

"Roads are practically choked, there are so many cars. And wages are high, but people spend a larger proportion of their incomes on food than in the United States."

Jones described prices in West Germany as "fantastically high."

Real estate prices, for instance, "have become so exorbitant that the average man can no longer aspire to owning his own home."

"We have to remember," he said, "that West Germany is roughly about the size of Oregon but has a population of about 62 million. In other words, it's crowded, and the more crowded it becomes the more the price of land goes up."

Despite the high cost of living, the average German worker has the money — and, with close to a month's vacation, the time — to take his family off on holiday every year, usually to some other European country. Travel agency business is soaring.

Jones attributes West German prosperity to the industriousness of its people.

"Or to put it another way," he explained, "when the necessity is there, the Germans are willing to work long and hard."

Rebuilding of Germany and other European nations after the World War II destruction began with American Marshall Plan aid in the immediate post-war years.

"This may be an over-simplification," Jones said, "but it seems to me as a lay observer that the French and Italians put their Marshall Plan money into housing and some of the more pleasurable things of life, while the West Germans used it to rebuild their factories and industry, thereby creating jobs."

In any event, he pointed out, only two European countries — West Germany and Sweden — have finally managed to outstrip the United States in per capita wealth.

Jones went on to say that he saw evidences early during his most recent visit to Germany of anti-Americanism on the part of young Germans because of United States involvement in Vietnam.

"This took the form of some very vociferous demonstrations," he noted, adding that they ended, however, with the signing of the ceasefire early this year.

"On the other hand, older Germans — those who remember World War II and its aftermath — are much more pro-American because they realize they would not be where they are today had it not been for Marshall Plan aid."

Jones found many older people reminiscing with a certain fondness about the difficult post-war years of 1945 to, say, 1952, when their concerns were as basic as keeping a roof over their heads and food on their tables.

"They say," he reported, "that the values of life in those years were few and simple, and that they felt good about a hard day's work."

The Ripon College professor noted that the major event which occurred during his most recent visit to Germany was the conclusion of the "cold war."

"I agree with the German press that the 'cold war' came to an official end in June of this year with the signing of the so-called basic agreement between East and West Germany which recognizes that there are and will continue to be two Germanies."

"Before that, the word was always 'reunification,' but nobody talks about reunification any more."

The other major political development of which the visitor is keenly aware, Jones continued, is Willy Brandt's "Ostpolitik," or "politics of the East," symbolized by the West German chancellor's trip to the Warsaw Pact nations.

Jones observed that the Federal Republic of Germany is "very aware of and very careful about" its relationships with Israel.

"I don't think there is any question but that this is because of World War II. Germans who have visited Warsaw in the past few years, for instance, have made it a point to visit the site of the Warsaw ghetto."

"Interestingly," he added, "there are few Jews in Germany today. There are a few Jewish communities but they are very small."

Jones said there was a small effort a few years ago to form a political party that might have been called neo-Nazi.

"But if there is any activity of that sort today, I certainly was not aware of it. People have seen that isn't going to get them anywhere."

Adolf Hitler, however, remains the Number 1 historical figure in Germany, but Jones finds interest in the Nazi dictator to be "what I would call an intellectual re-evaluation of the man and his period. And there is probably a little pooh-poohing of the whole thing, too."

Jones noted that the mood of the West German people is one of looking forward, not backward. "They're obviously dealing with the moment and with questions as to what the future holds for them."

Man held for robbing Iowa bank victim of infectious hepatitis

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Everett A. Johnson, accused of holding up a bank in Protivin, Iowa, was suffering from infectious hepatitis when taken recently before U.S. magistrate Barbara Crabb, government officials said.

Johnson, 29, of Hokah, Minn., was captured Monday on U.S. 18 south of Prairie du Chien, U.S. Atty. John Olson said, after approximately $5,800 was taken in the robbery.

Two U.S. marshals who took Johnson to Madison received inoculations against the hepatitis after physicians administered tests on Johnson at a hospital Tuesday.

Mrs. Crabb set bond at $25,000 for Johnson. He was kept in an isolated ward of Dane County Jail and was to be returned to Iowa.

Alcohol extracts staggering toll

BY TONY WALTER
Post-Crescent staff writer

MADISON — "Have I not reason to lament," complained poet William Wordsworth, "what man has made of man?"

Those "sad thoughts" that grieved the poet over a century and a half ago have grieved 20th century descendants. The problems of alcoholism offer contemporary evidence of what man has done to man and make Wordsworth's reflection sound somewhat naive.

Alcoholism, according to statistics, is a steady siphon draining the victim's healthy pocketbook. To the average taxpayer who regards the expense of curing alcoholism as a pittance, let him consider the fact that more than $13 million in Wisconsin taxes were used to fight alcoholism in 1972.

If that isn't sobering, perhaps this will be: The Department of Health and Social Services, Division of Mental Hygiene, estimates that there are 268,230 alcoholics in Wisconsin. That figure is over 5 per cent of the total state population.

The National Council on Alcoholism has evidence to prove that every alcoholic affects the lives of at least four other people. This means that 1,341,150 people, or about 31 per cent of the population, are affected by the problem. The drive to cure alcoholism is sapping the strength of other causes. Over 26 per cent of the patients in Mendota and Winnebago state hospitals are there because they are alcoholics or alcohol abusers.

The highway fatality record is the best example of alcohol's effect on safety. Despite state efforts, the problem worsens.

In 1971, 62 per cent of the persons killed in motor vehicle accidents were tested to determine if they had alcohol in their blood. Of those tested, 64 per cent had been drinking. About one-third of the pedestrian fatalities that year were tested for alcohol in the blood. Half had been drinking.

The law enforcement agencies have been busy dealing with this problem, too. Last year alone, there were 7,528 convictions for operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol. The year before, there were 25,322 arrests for public drunkenness, accounting for about one-third of all arrests.

If you add up all alcohol-related offenses such as driving under the influence, disorderly conduct and vagrancy, the percentage is close to half of all arrests. It is food for thought the next time you can't find a policeman when you want one.

But the overall economic effect of alcoholism is perhaps the most staggering. While $13 million is spent annually by Wisconsin taxpayers, it no where reaches the total expense of alcohol. For example, all those motor vehicle accidents blamed on alcohol totaled $18 million in wages loss, medical expenses, insurance costs and property damage.

In Wisconsin, it is estimated that 115,000 alcoholics work in industry, business, and state and local government and that they cause an annual economic loss of $176 million. There are 52,000 classified and unclassified state employees and 4,700 of them are alcoholics so that figures out to about $10 million lost in efficiency, time, etc.

Wisconsin can't really be faulted for failing to do something about its problem drinker, once he becomes an alcoholic.

A.F. Landig banker, dies at age 73

MENASHA — Alvin F. Landig, 73, 346 Third St., Menasha, a former vice president of the First National Bank of Menasha, died Saturday after a lingering illness. He was a native of Menasha and had been a resident of the city most of his life. Landig worked for 43 years for the bank before retiring in 1968. He was a member of Nicolet Council of the Knights of Columbus, the Catholic Knights, the Foresters, Holy Name Society of St. Mary Church, honorary life member of the Neenah-Menasha Elks Club and a charter member of the Menasha Lions Club and the Menasha Eagles Club. He also served on the vocational board of education of Menasha, board of the American Red Cross and the board of the Salvation Army. Survivors are his widow, three sons, four sisters, and nine grandchildren.

Visitation will be from 4 to 9 p. m. Monday at the Laemmrich Funeral Home. An Elks Club funeral service will be at 7 p. m. Monday and a prayer service at 8 p. m. Monday. Funeral services will be at 10 a. m. Tuesday at the funeral home and at 10:30 a. m. at St. Mary Catholic Church. Burial will be in the parish cemetery. A memorial is being established for the educational fund of St. Mary Central High School.

But until just recently, the state could not be credited with having strong drinking laws. The state legislature just passed a bill to lower the legally drunk level from .15 of the blood stream to .10. Wisconsin was one of only five states and Puerto Rico that maintained the .15 level.

The state has a quota system in which each county is allowed just so many liquor licenses. By law, one liquor license may be issued for every 500 persons but many establishments were "grandfathered" in when the quota system was enacted.

The Department of Health and Social Services has its own Bureau of Alcoholism and the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation has a separate section dealing with alcoholics.

Alcohol is big business in Wisconsin. The Department of Revenue reports that $29,444,113 was taken in on liquor and wine sale taxes in the 1972-73 fiscal year.

In addition, $8,536,124 was deposited into the general fund from beer sales. The Revenue Department also reports that 16,097,877 gallons of liquor and wine were purchased in the state during the 1972 calendar year.

Wisconsinites, or those visiting the state, purchased 128,716,805 gallons of beer in 1972. If you add the liquor and beer totals, it averages out to about 32 gallons per person per year. And that includes everyone, not just those of drinking age so the average per legal drinker is considerably higher.

The Revenue Department states that Wisconsin leads the nation in per capita consumption of beer and is around the national average in liquor consumption.

Swedish gunman, hostages held in vault

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Police locked a gunman, his accomplice and four hostages in the vault of a bank where the gunman was holding out for the third straight day Saturday. Police spokesmen said they hoped that by locking in the entire group they would later be able to seize the gunmen without harm to the hostages. "It must slowly grow in the gunman's mind that his position is untenable," said Police Supt. Kurt Lindroth. There was no immediate word on what was going on inside the locked vault or what the next police move would be. The vault measures 19 by 40 feet and police said the sanitary problems for the six persons inside were growing serious. The gunman called for a chemical toilet, food, sweatsuits and mattresses but their delivery was held up in a dispute over how the supplies could be moved through the vault's two doors. The Swedish radio said the gunman reportedly had threatened to hold out until next month's elections. The gunman took over the main Kreditbanken office in downtown Stockholm on Thursday after two policemen burst in as he was trying to hold up the bank. One policeman was wounded during an exchange of gunfire. Armed with a machine gun, the gunman held four bank employees — three women and one man — while police reinforcements surrounded the bank and tried to get him to surrender. At the gunman's demand, police released convict Clark Olofsson on Thursday and brought him to the bank to join the gunman, whom he apparently knew. They turned over $650,000 ransom and offered the gunman and Olofsson safe passage out of Sweden in return for release of the hostages. The gunman refused, insisting he must retain a hostage with him to guarantee his flight. Authorities negotiated fruitlessly for two days.

Then about 50 armed police wearing bullet-proof vests inched their way into the bank early Saturday and closed the vault where they said the gunman was sleeping. The police carried acetylene torches and tools as they crept toward the vault, leading to the belief they were going to cut through the steel and seize the gunman and his accomplice. The bank robber's identity was not firmly established. Police first identified him as Kaj Hansson, 21. Later they withdrew that identity and speculated the gunman was a 35-year-old safecracker.

Two miners found dead in Arizona

CASA GRANDE, Ariz. (AP) — Two miners trapped underground for eight days were found dead late Saturday when rescuers finally broke through a wall of muck which had sealed the pair in a dead-end tunnel 1,200 feet underground. Jerry Turnbow, Hecla Mine Co. spokesman, announced that the bodies of David Deeder, 41, of Casa Grande, and Terry Udall, 24 of Fort Collins, Colo., had been found. "We are sorry to say the men are not alive," said Turnbow. There was never any response from the men after the cave-in. Company officials had been optimistic the men would be found alive because three miners who escaped from the cave-in saw them fleeing into the dead-end tunnel. Turnbow said it was not known how long the two miners had been dead nor how they died. He said autopsies would be performed.

roit plants since bargaining began in July. While the union says the actions "did not dictate the decision," a lengthy strike against Chrysler would be the perfect response to charges the union was "selling out" the workers. THE LEADERSHIP: Woodcock reaches mandatory retirement age of 65 in early 1976 and Douglas Fraser, the union's Chrysler division vice president, is considered a likely successor. Targeting Chrysler has put Fraser in the limelight. THE INDUSTRY: Auto sales and company earnings have continued to break records this year. A strike at Chrysler, which controls about 17 per cent of the domestic market, would have the smallest impact on the national economy. With many auto plants operating at capacity, a long strike at Ford or General Motors would probably create a shortage of autos on the market, with the possibility of provoking adverse public response during the current trend toward government economic regulation.

STRIKE COST: Because Chrysler employees account for only one-seventh of the UAW's total auto industry representation, a strike at Chrysler would be easiest to pull off in the wake of 1970's costly assault on GM. The union is planning to amass a strike fund of $60 million this year — about half what it had three years ago. Actually, statements about the joint U.S.-Canadian contract refers to an issue that will not have major impact, at least in the United States. The firm's 14,500 UAW-represented Canadian workers started out at the beginning of the 1970 contract with the same wage scale as the 114,500 U.S. workers. They also started out with the same cost of living allowance formula. For each group of workers, however, inflation-caused increases were linked to the consumer price index in their own country. Because inflation has been more rapid south of the border, U.S. workers currently are receiving 11 cents more per hour. The union wants to close the gap and move to use of a composite index in the future.

Probably more important as possible strike issues and for their economic impact are union demands for full benefits on retirement after 30 years of service, paid dental care, voluntary overtime, more time off and a cost of living formula that rules out any decline in real wages. While one top GM official has said the auto giant will not be bound by a settlement at Chrysler unless it is "reasonable," major industrywide contract developments will likely be pioneered at the target firm as they have in the past. Commented Fraser last week: "1973 is the year we have to solve the problems ... and unless we can solve them by Sept. 14, then we're going to strike."

Hijacker of Yemeni plane surrenders

KUWAIT (AP) — A North Yemeni wielding a pistol and hand grenades surrendered to Kuwait authorities Saturday night after hijacking a Yemen Airways DC6 on a flight from Tai'zz, North Yemen, to Asmara, Ethiopia. Kuwaiti authorities accepted five demands from the man including guaranteeing his safety in Kuwait before he agreed to turn over his arms and leave the plane which carried 17 persons. The man, identified as Nasser Ahmed Abu Bakr, 54, left the plane carrying his weapons and turned them over to officials before formally surrendering to the Kuwait foreign minister, Sheikh Sabah al Ahmed, and the deputy interior minister, Gen. Abdul Latif Ad-Duwaini. The plane landed at this tiny Persian Gulf state after a 1,300-mile flight across Saudi Arabia from Djibouti, in East Africa, where the four-engine propeller-driven aircraft stopped briefly for refueling. Kuwait authorities permitted the plane to land after Abu Bakr threatened to crash-land it into the desert if refused permission to land.

Chile socialism troubled

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Chile's experiment in socialism is in deep trouble as sectors of the armed forces harden their attitude toward President Salvador Allende. Among the critical problems facing Allende as he nears the halfway point in his six-year term as the Western Hemisphere's first freely elected Marxist president: —The cost of living shot up 323 per cent in the last 12 months. —A drop in industrial and agricultural production has forced the government to spend hundreds of millions of dollars for imports. Food imports alone this year are expected to approach $500 million. —Despite soaring world copper prices hovering near $1 a pound, the nationalized copper mines produced only 593,000 tons of copper last year. Production was forecast at nearly twice that. Chile earns 80 per cent of its income from copper sales. The production drop thus has depleted foreign exchange reserves for needed imports. —A series of nationwide strikes — including a walkout by truckers and most bus and taxi owners seeking new vehicles, more spare parts and higher rates — has plunged the economy further into trouble. The strikes have been accompanied by street violence and sabotage, further sapping public confidence in the regime. Allende's leftist coalition government, which includes Communists and Socialists, blames Chile's difficulties on an "economic blockade" of credits by the United States and on the opposition controlled congress. The legislature has continually put the brakes on Allende's efforts to lead Chile "down the road to socialism." Through all his tribulations, Allende could count on the traditionally neutral Chilean armed forces to protect his regime, the product of a democratic election carried out within Chile's constitutional heritage. Allende brought three military men into his Cabinet in an effort to restore stability to his government following last October's antigovernment strikes. The military left after the March congressional elections, in which the government won several new seats in both houses of congress. The modest electoral victories, which still left the opposition in control, nevertheless were interpreted as an indication blue collar voters felt better off under Allende than under previous governments because of state-ordered wage increases and preferential treatment for workers in food distribution. But the transport strike and intense opposition pressure forced Allende to bring the military back into his government this summer, again in an effort to restore confidence in the economy and his management of the country. Allende named the army, navy and air force chiefs and the head of the country's uniformed police to top jobs in what he called his "national security" Cabinet. But the military mood had changed since October. Some officers apparently felt they were being used as a political storm shelter for Allende. A group of army officers felt army chief Gen. Carlos Prats and half a dozen other generals were going political, breaking with the military's apolitical tradition. The first indication came June 29, when members of an armored regiment revolted and attacked the Moneda presidential palace and the Defense Ministry with tanks and machine guns. Allende was not in the palace and loyal troops quelled the rebellion, but not before 22 persons were killed. Last week, Gen. Cesar Ruiz pulled out of Allende's Cabinet as minister of transport and public works. He also resigned as air force chief after a futile attempt at resolving the transport strike. Ruiz, cool toward the president, reportedly felt Allende hadn't given him enough powers to negotiate with the strikers. His departure generated discontent within the air force that was reflected in a full alert and movement of jet fighters by his supporters to keep him on as air force chief. Ruiz smoothed things over in hours of meetings with his fellow officers. Their wives openly demonstrated in support of him in front of the Defense Ministry. Then Prats resigned from the army and as defense minister on Thursday. In his letter of resignation, he acknowledged what had previously been just rumor: a substantial group of officers wanted to force him out because they felt he was drawing them too far into the political arena as a crutch for the Allende government.

U.S. may build bigger missiles big edge in numbers of missile launchers while trying to negotiate a permanent lid on offensive weapons. The theory was that the advantages on both sides balanced each other so that neither the United States nor the Soviet Union ended up ahead. But the Russians now have tested a huge new missile carrying at least six warheads, each big enough to yield the explosive power of a million tons of TNT. That is about five times the blast yield of the biggest U.S. MIRV, aboard Minuteman III intercontinental ballistic missiles. Secretary of Defense James R. Schlesinger told a recent news conference that "the United States is not in a position to tolerate the numerical or quantitative advantages possessed by the Soviet Union."

FBI employee pledge asked

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seeking to end leaks of confidential information, the FBI is requiring its employees to sign a new agreement. It warns they are liable to criminal prosecution if they make unauthorized disclosures about the bureau, a Justice Department spokesman said Saturday. The new employment agreement follows complaints by Vice President Spiro T. Agnew that the press was being leaked information on the Maryland probe involving alleged kickbacks from contractors to government officials. President Nixon has said he ordered Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson to investigate the leaks. The FBI spokesman, however, said the new pledge is not a direct outgrowth of the Agnew-Nixon plea for more confidentiality. Richardson has told Agnew that he has asked the FBI to help determine sources of leaks about an investigation into whether the vice president took payoffs from contractors while he was Baltimore County executive, Maryland governor and vice president.

Rustling grows in Florida

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Beef shortages have caused an increase in cattle rustling in Florida, and state Agricultural Commissioner Doyle Conner has been one of the victims. Thieves made off with 75 head of cattle from his Starke ranch recently, Conner said Friday he talked with reporters about hiring more livestock theft investigators.

to what are termed "equal aggregates" of missile power, there will be no SALT II agreement. In an interview, Schlesinger would not discuss negotiating strategy, but he described the Russians as "horse traders ... a very pragmatic people." "They have no willingness to participate in an intellectual assessment of a common problem," Schlesinger said. "They view this as a bargaining issue and they intend to come out of it looking as well as they can." But the American people are not going to accept second place to the Russians, he said. While looking for a negotiating formula to avoid a new spiral in the nuclear arms race, high defense officials stress they will be watching to see whether the Russians intend to deploy large numbers of MIRVs. They calculate the Russians could have a formidable force of MIRVed missiles by the early 1980s. According to this timetable, the United States would be able to wait until fiscal 1976 or 1977 to move into actual production of new or improved weapons to counterbalance the Soviet gains. But that would require moving ahead vigorously soon on the weapons so they can be ready for production. One approach almost certain to get top priority is development of what Schlesinger calls "prevision initiatives." These "hard-target" warheads would require greater accuracy than present U.S. warheads possess. Current American weapons are intended to be fired against big targets like cities rather than pinpoint objectives. While retaining the basic U.S. strategy of deterring massive Soviet nuclear attack by threatening Russian cities with mighty counterblows, Schlesinger is inclined toward arming this country with a limited ability to hit selected Soviet military targets. This is called "limited counterforce" in the jargon of the nuclear warfare specialists. In the view of high defense officials, this would give the President an option to respond with less than all-out nuclear war if the Soviets should use their excess missile warhead capacity to attempt what some authorities call "limited adventurism" against NATO or some other U.S. ally such as Iran. Congress last year rejected a Pentagon bid for about $20 million to start development of a "hard target" warhead. But Schlesinger contends an American move in this direction would not be provocative because "The Russians very clearly are moving on into that area" of a substantial hard target kill capability of their own. Schlesinger believes that the climate in the country is starting to change and that Congress and the American people would go along with new weapons initiatives if they are shown the danger of a nuclear imbalance developing.

Action 11 and air pollution

Circuit Judge Robert Parins reversed himself Thursday and allowed WLUC-TV to cover a DNR hearing in Green Bay with its cameras. We were happy with his ruling, because his action the day before in restricting Channel 11's coverage of the hearing was most puzzling.

The hearing concerns a complaint filed by Glen Loyd, Action 11 reporter for the station, and four citizens, against named industrial firms in the Green Bay area seeking to determine the source of foul-smelling odors in Green Bay's air. The Metropolitan Sewerage District and a pig farm were also named.

It should be emphasized that this is a fact-finding proceeding. Channel 11 did not accuse any of these firms of polluting the atmosphere. The station made it clear that it believed there was air pollution in the area, and that it was attempting to find out where it was coming from.

Three of the named firms came forward immediately and offered testimony as to what they had done to control their emissions. They were released from the case by the DNR examiner. Another entered into a consent agreement to take positive action to correct its problem by a specified date.

But attorneys for the other firms chose a different route. They attacked Channel 11's motives and declared the station was merely trying to build up its listener ratings. They went to Judge Parins seeking an order barring the station from covering the hearings.

Judge Parins on Wednesday said he didn't have time to hear the arguments that day, but would do so on Thursday. In the meantime he barred Channel 11 from using cameras to cover any testimony regarding the firms which had protested. That is the ruling we were upset about, but he clarified the situation Thursday by declaring that the public's right to know outweighed any problems tv cameras might cause in the conduct of the hearing.

The objecting attorneys would have served their clients better, and the general public also, by addressing themselves to the question at issue. That question is, Who is polluting the air in Green Bay, and What can be done about it?

Tax money for transit

For the first time the state treasury will disburse tax funds as subsidies to the local passenger bus lines in Wisconsin, those that have already been taken over by municipalities, and those whose operations are being supported by local tax fund allocations through city budgets.

Whether the inclusion of such funding in the new state budget act represents a solid conviction on the part of the legislature of the need for such state support, or its wisdom, is not yet certain. Like many other extraordinary measures contained in the catch-all state budget this year, it may have been accepted by the legislature as the price of enactment of the long delayed general state services appropriation bill, without a true conviction among a majority of the legislators recorded on the final roll call about the merit of many of its extraordinarily diverse list of novel propositions.

Notwithstanding, a state precedent of sorts has been recorded. Precedents for using public money for failing private bus lines had been provided by municipalities. Some municipalities have also acquired bus lines that collapsed under private ownership, with the result that their subsidies were borne, in effect, by the property taxpayers of the community who may or may not be bus riders.

But the question will be reviewed again in Madison, because the $5,000,000 sum thus far made available for such state aid will almost surely be far from sufficient.

The appropriation is for a biennial period. The losses already experienced by some municipal lines, plus subsidies now being paid to succor private lines, will virtually equal the aid appropriation for the two years. The legislature has already authorized Milwaukee County to buy and operate as a public utility the sagging bus company in the city of Milwaukee and environs. That will almost surely require a generous additional state fund appropriation.

Thus the state has not yet truly confronted the transit question. It has dabbled. The issue will be more clearly presented, as Gov. Lucey has suggested, in the annual budget review session of the legislature after the turn of the year. Then the question appears likely to be combined with a replenishment of funds for highway and bridge improvements through a revision of the motor fuel tax schedule.

Tradition, prejudice, habit and self-interest undoubtedly will make many rural and small town legislators reluctant to tax their constituents for the benefit of city bus-riders. But the urban interest in the legislature, combined with Gov. Lucey's veto power, may force an accommodation, nevertheless. Unless we mistake his signals, the governor is saying that if rural Wisconsin wants road improvements, it must also acknowledge urban Wisconsin's separate transport interests.

Another victory over retardation

The headlines usually go to dramatic breakthroughs on cancer or ways to put off the inevitable ravages of age. But a little known discovery in England could affect the lives of millions of people.

Cytomegalic inclusion is a disease caused by a virus. It doesn't appear to harm adults very much although its effects, if any, are not known for children. But it does cause often severe problems and even death when a pregnant woman contracts it.

The virus is passed to the foetus and may cause abortion or kill a newborn infant from brain or liver damage. About one baby in 200 is born with the infection. Some show minor symptoms, many do not. Later in infancy or childhood the viral damage on the brain may become apparent. In varying degrees the child may be mentally retarded. This happens to at least 10 per cent of those who had the infection at birth or during the mother's pregnancy.

Actually about two children out of every 100 born have some kind of retardation. Some are from genetic abnormalities or other viruses such as German measles. But many doctors now believe that cytomegalic virus is the most common viral condition in spite of the publicity given to rubella in the last few years.

Two British researchers, Drs. Stephen Elek and Harold Stern, have developed a vaccine to combat the virus. So far experiments have shown the vaccine to be safe while it produces the needed antibodies. However, the testing time has been only one year so it is not known for sure how long the vaccine is effective.

Mental retardation in recent years has been approached sympathetically. No longer are retarded children or adults shunted aside to institutions, laughed at as "dummies" or feared. The victory over cytomegalic inclusion can reduce the chances for babies to be born already mentally flawed.

Newsprint situation suddenly critical

Rapid developments early this week outdated the statement I made in this column last week that The Post-Crescent had no newsprint problems for the present.

A regional strike on the Canadian National Railroad, combined with present and prospective strikes against Canadian newsprint mills, suddenly altered the situation.

The railroad strike suddenly brought production to a halt at the Spruce Falls Power and Paper Co. mill at Kapuskasing, Ontario. This subsidiary of Kimberly-Clark is our principal supplier.

Spruce Falls has also been negotiating a new contract with the papermakers union which has struck three other Canadian newsprint manufacturers. The union has taken a strike vote and the situation may come to a head next week.

Our other two regular suppliers are Abitibi Newsprint Corp. with a number of mills in Canada, and Great Lakes Paper Co., with a mill at Thunder Bay, Ont. Production at these mills has not been affected so far but all mills are under considerable pressure to help make up shortages resulting from strikes elsewhere.

The most serious strike is against International Paper Company whose four Canadian mills make up 10 per cent of that country's newsprint production. Two mills of Boise-Cas-cade's Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Co. subsidiary are closed in Ontario, and Price Brothers' mill in Ontario has been down for 10 days because of a strike. Price Brothers is a supplier to the West Bend News and thus indirectly affects us here.

Because of this situation we are taking steps this week to conserve on newsprint in every possible way without cutting back on space in the paper for either news or advertising, and without affecting our regular subscribers.

The first place we cut back was on the number of copies distributed around the plant. A certain number are needed for checking the paper in editorial and advertising departments, but we found quite a few going to waste in our own offices here.

We are also watching closely the number of copies we have to discard when the press is starting up on the run, and when we change rolls. We are also checking closely on the number of copies made available to dealers for street sale, and if you find that dealers are out of papers when you want one it is because we are cutting them back to their average daily usage.

Rather surprisingly, we found that these measures saved us 400 copies the first day we instituted them, and an additional 100 copies the next day.

We carry a normal 30 days supply of newsprint in our underground storage facilities, and what we are trying very hard to do is maintain our inventory at that level. One of the problems is that even with that inventory we may run short on certain sizes of rolls.

The critical situation is a temporary one, caused by the railroad strike and strikes against the mills. The Canadian government is pressing vigorously for a settlement of the railroad strike. Solution of the strikes against the mills is more uncertain.

But as I wrote last Sunday, the temporary crisis comes on top of a growing long-term shortage situation which has been brought on by greatly increased demand (newspaper circulation and advertising volume are both up across the country) versus little increase in production. Profits of the newsprint industry have been minimal in recent years despite constantly increasing prices to newspaper users, and this has discouraged investment in new production equipment.

We anticipated the general shortage some time ago and took steps at that time to increase our commitments from suppliers. But the temporary crisis developed rapidly this week, and we decided we had better act now in the hope we can avoid more serious problems later.

Art Buchwald

Pilots menace travelers' peace

Art Buchwald has gone off for a few weeks to forget about Waterloo. He left behind some of his all-time favorite columns which he insists to the best of his recollection, at that point in time and in hindsight, everyone wanted to read again.

WASHINGTON—There's now a new breed of pilot flying our commercial airways, and he's becoming a menace to the peace and tranquility of the traveler. The taciturn James Stewart-type pilot is being replaced by the extroverted David Susskind-type who not only never stops talking but tells you a lot more about flying than you want to know.

In the old days of air transportation, you hardly heard from the captain up forward. He might have told you when you were taking off and when you could expect to land, but outside of that he spent his time flying the plane, which is the most anyone expects of his pilot anyway.

But now, because he's either lonely or bored, or because the public relations departments of the airlines are in charge of the crews, the captain does a complete monologue from the time you get on the plane to the time you land. This is how it goes.

"Hi, folks, this is your captain. Well, we're going to have a great flight today at LA. Your hostesses are Kitty, Patti and I'm Jack. I'm married and have three fine children—Hildy, Freddy and Lisa—and we live in Roslyn, Long Island. We have a swell house and we belong to the First Congregational Church.

"There are some clouds over Kansas City, so we'll just avoid Kansas City today, which is not a great problem because we can get to LA anyway. It's lucky we're not going up to Montreal because they're really socked in there, and there's a hurricane off Puerto Rico. But that shouldn't bother us today.

"We had some trouble with the turbofan which delayed us a few minutes, but it's been fixed now. We really don't need the turbofan, but government regulations require that it be in working order, just in case the gyrowhizzit goes out, which is hardly likely.

"Now, when we get in the air, you're going to hear a change in pitch in the motors, but don't let that bother you. If you didn't hear a change, then you should be bothered. Ha-ha-ha.

"I'll be getting up my wheels as soon as I take off, and you may hear a slight thump, but don't be disturbed by it. You have to get those wheels up fast when you're taking off—otherwise you don't get the lift, and a plane this size needs all the lift it can get, believe you me.

William F. Buckley

British system has faults, too

Mr. Buckley is on vacation. His column for the week will be written by Morris Ryskind, a Pulitzer prize winner.

LONDON—The English are following the American crisis with a certain amount of satisfaction, to be sure, which is altogether natural under the circumstances historical and political. It is fashionable, over here, to say that under English institutional arrangements, the "American kind of thing" could not have happened. Mr. Michael Foot, the distinguished, and just a bit dreamy, Socialist MP is hot on the theme, pointing out that in England all you have to do is vote No Confidence in the Prime Minister and presto presto you get yourself a new Prime Minister. Mr. Foot is very proud of the supremacy of Parliament, and wishes we would have a supreme Parliament.

We knocked that around a bit, and I suggested that there was a case for divided government, pointing out the occasional uses of a Supreme Court that could say no alike to the legislature and to the executive, and also the occasional uses of an independent executive, which could survive plebiscitary passions in the Congress.

Unanswered questions While we were at it, Mr. Foot was invited to explain how come his Prime Minister could take his country to war in the Suez in 1956 without consulting anybody, including—as we look back on it—the people who supply armies with gasoline and fish and chips. He was asked to meditate on the decision of his beloved Parliament to suspend elections during the Second World War, even though Abraham Lincoln managed an election in the middle of our war, and was reminded that whereas in the U.S. you need a court order to search and enter, the English can just go ahead, without restraint. But we parted friends.

Otherwise, the concerns of the English are as usual catholic. Mr. Malcolm Muggeridge's memoirs are being serialized, and they are not surpassed, perhaps not even equalled, in quality and interest. He has done everything, known everyone, and when he was born a star was assigned to him which has followed him about ever since, through all his enthusiasms, disillusionments, and rediscoveries, shedding its light on him and providing him the supreme blessing: Muggeridge has never been dull. He could rewrite the opera of the Fabian Society, and make them joyous to read.

Prince Andrew, 13, wishes, according to the front page of The Express, that "Mummy would sometimes say 'no.'" The incident grew out of the Queen's reviewing some Color Guard or other yesterday, and being asked the ritual permission after the ceremony to break ranks. Her son was heard to whisper his yearning to his accompanying colonel, or nanny, or whomever, and one's heart goes out to him, particularly since the photographed expression on Her Majesty's face suggests that she will be practicing saying no in the moments immediately ahead of her on returning to the Castle.

Also on the front page there is a call from the president of the football league, after surveying the damage done to the railroad cars by the young fans who had come to the game, to "bring back the birch," by which he means bringing back the caning of youthful offenders who are not, one gathers, disciplined effectively by fines. Someone instantly objected that the damage done to the cars is done only by the "unruly minority," and the reader is left supposing that the president of the football league opposed nudging the orderly majority, though that was not, I think, his intention.

Olympic games in Moscow? Mr. Bernard Levin, a splendid writer and journalist of the anti-humbbug school, warns against having the Olympic Games in Moscow in 1980, reminding us all of the fiasco of 1936 when Hitler turned the Berlin Games into a Aryan Paean. Actually, I think this time Mr. Levin is wrong. 1980 is only seven years off, and I cannot imagine how the Russians could simultaneously prepare a) to receive, house, and feed, 50,000 people for the Olympic Games, and b) prepare for a world war. Anybody who has ever lined up for a cup of tea and a sandwich in Moscow will understand what I mean.

And then there is a lady called Phyllis Cornell, an expatriate American, who writes in The Times that she was recently re-disillusioned about America on taking a trip to Williamsburg. For one thing she resents the "savage" cuts in welfare taken by Richard Nixon. It is hard to understand how the lady would account for the fact that we are spending more money than ever on welfare. But mostly she was upset by having been given a menu that listed a "vegetable du jour" which turned out to be "tinned peas." I quote her: "Yes," I thought, "it figures, 'a people who will accept tinned peas as vegetable du jour will easily be duped by a Syngman Rhee, a Bao Dai, a Ky, Thieu, and come to think of it, a Nixon.'" Syngman Rhee! I had plumb forgotten how he had been taken in by Syngman Rhee! Ms. Cornell makes no reference to Leonid Brezhnev, whom one might suppose she's have held up as our vegetable du jour.

Trailer legally parked?

Editor, The Post-Crescent: I am writing in reference to an article written in the Courts section, B-3 Wed. August 8, and I quote in full:

"Paul A. Skenandore, 34, 736 W. Oklahoma St., was fined $25 and costs in Outagamie County Court Branch 2 after he was found guilty of a disorderly conduct charge stemming from telephone calls to Appleton police June 10.

"Police said he called six times and demanded that a legally parked truck be moved from the 500 block of W. College Ave. He was making the seventh call, from a tavern, when police walked in and arrested him."

I would like to know who is responsible for the writing of this section of the paper and to state that:

1. It was not a legally parked truck. It was a trailer W/O tractor.
2. The trailer took up three parking stalls and left only one parking place free in front of a business place that was open for business.
3. This occurred on a weekend.
4. The business that was open only has parking on the avenue due to remodeling of his place of business.
5. I still question the legality of such parking permission.

Television censorship

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

I still cannot believe it. Two television stations I have been viewing since I can remember are practicing what I feel is blatant censorship, hopping over the admittedly fragile line of moral responsibility into the arena of video-marshall law.

I realized it for the first time last Sunday evening when I decided to watch the Maude episode dealing with abortion. I wanted to learn what all the controversy was about concerning the 2-party story, but was then informed by a WBAY-TV (Channel 2) announcer that, because of letters opposing the show, it was being pre-empted. The announcer said that Channel 2 had also received adverse mail concerning the show when it had first been shown. I then sidestepped the proven fact that people tend to write adverse letters and ignore writing supportive letters, and then chalked the whole thing up to experience, telling myself to catch such programs the first time around, just to be safe.

But wait a minute, I thought, what show did I miss last Friday? A quick check showed that Channel 2 had also pre-empted the controversial drama Sticks and Bones, a much talked about program about a returning Vietnam veteran. It had been pre-empted earlier on a national basis because it had been scheduled while real soldiers were returning from Vietnam before nation wide cameras.

The question here is: does Channel 2 (and many other stations around the country who pre-empt the show) have the right to pre-empt a show that has never been viewed by the public? After all, it was released by the national CBS network and not blocked by any high court that I ever read about. Obviously, the public had no say in the matter. If letters were written to the station about this show, what could one write? That "a show you might air might disagree with my own point of view, so don't show it to me, because what I don't see can't hurt me?" It almost sounds familiar.

The usual arguments, voiced by various letters read over the air Sunday night on Channel 2, contend that some child might see such a show and be immediately condemned to a life of outright hostility or some such nonsense. While a child is under the care of a parent, babysitter or what have you, let the censorship, if it must, rest there. Once a child is old enough to stay by himself he ought to also receive the right to judge other's viewpoints in the framework in which they are put forth. I am not talking of pornography, but of viewpoints, however controversial. It's been said that people of all ages have equal rights, it's just a matter of how many you obtain as you get older.

As to the other incident which I must write about — I nearly laughed, and yet was angered at the same time. After working all day and missing the President's Wednesday press conference, I was extremely glad to learn that NBC would carry the press conference and a discussion of it at nine o'clock.

I awaited the hour anxiously and tuned in on time to see what I thought was an ad for snowmobiles. Instead, I came to realize that WFRV-TV (Channel 5) had decided to chuck the news conference that I'd missed and was going ahead with its regularly scheduled special: Big Horn! about "the endangered American bighorn sheep." It might have been a beautiful special, a wonderful program, but I was too irate to sit and watch it. Could that show possibly have benefited the public more than a special concerning the most talked about news item of the week? Pardon my saying so, but I think I'd win any arguments on the subject. Certainly it is Channel 5's right to show Big Horn! but was it responsible in doing so? A show such as this can be aired anytime, while the President's press conference, because of its uniqueness, is important, immediate news.

The real "big horn" was applied, I feel, to the public of northeastern Wisconsin.

If it appears as if this letter lacks constructive criticism, let me sum up: let the public decide for themselves what is important — it is, after all, our right to do so.

And, should immediate responsibility to the public be warranted (as in the case of the press conference) I would hope that such media would take a stronger view of the public's intelligence.

Smoking in the hospital

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

Recently I was hospitalized for minor surgery at a local hospital. I was personally able to check myself in.

I am allergic to all smoke. I was immediately subjected to tobacco smoke upon entering admittance. There it was necessary to insist on being placed with a non-smoking partner. This required checking further with floor nurses and possible patients.

After this was accomplished I was sent to the lab to have necessary tests and specimens taken. Sure enough, I encountered more smokers. They were "t all other patients either. From there I was taken up to the nurse's station on my floor, to be checked in there. This is located opposite the elevators and is constantly saturated with smoke.

My room was located near this area and it was necessary to keep the door closed tight to keep our room relatively free of smoke fumes. Fortunately my bed partner preferred the door closed, also. Every time someone came in our room it was necessary to ask them to close the door and explain the reason. If they forgot I could get up and do it myself, until I was given post-operative drugs. After I received these one person forgot to close it and I had to ring the bell to have them come shut it.

Israel has right to defend itself

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

I would like to take issue with a Post-Crescent editorial of August 18 entitled "Israelis Going Too Far" and with the Evans and Novak column of August 19 titled Israel "Getting too Smart for Own Good." Both articles deal with the recent interception of an Iraqi airliner by Israel.

During the last three years Arab terrorists have succeeded in heavily straining international air traffic, terrorizing thousands and killing hundreds of passengers. This they did with the assistance of Arab governments who offered them free movement and operating bases. Moreover, those same governments, with the assistance of the USSR and China, successfully blocked efforts in the U.N. in curbing air-piracy. The Arab terrorists repeatedly announced their immediate as well as ultimate target to destroy Israel and its people. No nation has yet denounced its right of self-defense, the growing arsenals may attest to this fact. It is against any logical thinking, therefore, why Israel should be the only nation to acquiesce in hostile activities against her and not take any action.

Messieurs Evans and Novak ought to be praised for their straightforwardness in tackling the perplexed triangle of Arab oil-Israel-U.S. relations. In their minds there can be no doubt of who is right in the conflict. The fact that King Faisal's country "sits on 24% of the world's known reserves of crude oil" is enough "to justify a new look at the tumultuous Middle East." What these two gentlemen mean with a "new look" needs no elaboration.

We should like to remind Mr. Novak and Mr. Evans of their similarly alarming threats in the past that unless Israel yields the Soviet Union will take over the whole Middle East. Well, as it turned out, Israel's "intransigence" brought about the expulsion of the Soviet Union from Egypt and a parallel increase in U.S. prestige in that part of the world.

Finally, it is about time that Messieurs Novak and Evans know that Israel is an independent state and that her duly elected representatives are solely responsible for the country's foreign and defense policy. Any implication that leaders of United States Jewry are in any way responsible for or involved in the making of Israel's foreign policy is an outright misstatement of the simple truth.

Crack down on bicyclists

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

As a newcomer to Appleton I must comment that the bike riders here are the most bizarre group I have witnessed so far. In our area children and adults ride without lights, ride four or five across the road, don't use hand signals, dart out of driveways and ride in circles in the streets.

Isn't it about time parents educate their children as to the rules of the road? If the parents are too lazy then require a written exam and a road test and issue a license. And Appleton Police Department, how about doing these kids a favor and start cracking down on cyclists darting through stop lights and people who ride at night with no lights or reflectors.

Let's make bike riders responsible for accidents they cause. Since they are on the road along with cars and motorcycles they should know the rules of the road before more precious little ones die.

Kissinger's new job will have its risks

WASHINGTON — For beleaguered President Nixon, the elevation of Dr. Henry A. Kissinger to Secretary of State was a political master stroke, but for Kissinger himself it is fraught with dangers that threaten his charmed life.

For the President, the move takes advantage of by far the brightest shining figure in his pallid administration. By elevating Kissinger to the No. 1 cabinet post, the President at once exploits the mystical public appeal of his ace foreign policy adviser and reinforces his administration at its weakest point: the State Department, cleanly vacuumed of all power by Kissinger's staff at the White House. The impact is felt simultaneously on domestic and world opinion.

Must energize bureaucracy

But Kissinger could become the victim of the dormant State Department bureaucracy he will now try to energize. If he is undercut in that struggle, U.S. foreign policy and the battered President will suffer along with Kissinger.

Kissinger's aura even in these grim Watergate days is indisputable considering his routine experience wherever he goes. He is literally besieged by citizens, of every age and shape, seeking his autograph and a handshake. He is the only inner-circle Nixon man to have risen and stayed above the sordid White House climate fear and secrecy that marked the ascendancy of H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman.

Kissinger was himself a prime victim of that climate. According to second-level White House aides, he was sometimes deliberately kept away from crowds on Haldeman's orders to avoid comparison with the President in terms of applause.

The Kissinger appointment was desperately needed by Mr. Nixon as domestic tonic in the wake of his widely criticized Watergate speech and his dismal performance in New Orleans last Monday. Likewise, it is of inestimable political value in relations with foreign nations, particularly Moscow and Peking, which are ominously concerned about the credibility and vigor of the Nixon administration's remaining years. Kissinger's elevation is the first solid indication, since he was forced to fire Haldeman and Ehrlichman April 30, that the President can act boldly and imaginatively.

Political assets in change

That was clearly a central reason for relentless persuasion by the new White House chief of staff, Alexander M. Haig, Jr., that the President transfer Kissinger to the polished seventh floor of the State Department. Quietly and patiently, Haig had been displaying to Mr. Nixon the political assets he predicted would pile up if Kissinger were given the foreign portfolio in name as well as deed.

The President, desperate for such assets, first indicated his mind was made up Saturday Aug. 18, when he asked Kissinger to cancel all foreign trips for the immediate future. The hard offer came three days later.

Kissinger accepted instantly, assuring a bureaucratic revolution in the moribund State Department that Kissinger, no tidy bureaucrat, may not be able to control. Kissinger is an intellectual and a strategic planner, not a paper-pusher keeping tabs on fitness reports.

Kissinger intends to use his new post to "institutionalize" the vast foreign policy changes he and the President have made. He wants to take unconventional patterns of diplomacy developed in the White House and graft them onto conventional State Department patterns. That means taking the regular Foreign Service into his full confidence and giving it real authority.

Must restore bypassed units

Such State Department offices as the Bureau of European Affairs, the Bureau of Intelligence and Research and the Bureau of Planning and Coordination have been virtually bypassed in the Nixon-Kissinger foreign policy revolution. As Secretary of State, Kissinger either must return these and other bureaus to their old eminence or risk fatal bureaucratic ambush.

Both the President and Kissinger want Kenneth Rush, who as Under

Skimpier TV campaign budgets seen in '74

Jim Allison, former GOP deputy chairman

By editors of The Washington Monthly Charles Peters, James Fallows and Walter Shapiro.

With the midterm congressional campaigns little more than a year away, Republican professionals are bracing for the possible impact of Watergate. One of the few GOP insiders willing to talk on the record about this problem is Jim Allison, who was deputy chairman of the Republican National Committee from 1969 to 1971. Currently he is a partner in a campaign consultant and public relations firm along with Harry Treleven, who ran Richard Nixon's television campaign in 1968.

Q: What impact do you see Watergate having on the 1974 congressional elections?

A: I am inclined to think it will affect both parties in general more than Republicans in particular. I can see the public looking on virtually all politicians with suspicion and contempt. If that's the case, the mood in 1974 could easily become "throw the rescals out."

Q: Then you could see a number of incumbents of both parties being defeated for reelection next year?

A: Yes. There is likely to be some kind of anti-incumbent feeling. Watergate may also turn off large segments of the public to politics. Voter turnouts will decline even further, and candidates will discover that attracting volunteers and raising money will become increasingly difficult.

Q: How would you advise a Republican congressional candidate to handle Watergate?

A: I'd advise him to take the defensive. For example, I'd have him make his personal finances public and call for full disclosure by all public officials. I'd also have him stress that the Republican party itself was not involved in Watergate. It is no secret by now that the Republican party was entirely closed out of the President's reelection efforts.

Q: What about someone like House minority leader Gerry Ford who has been outspoken in his support of the President throughout the whole Watergate affair? Don't you think administration loyalists such as Ford run the risk of being labeled "party hacks"?

A: It all depends on how the President comes out of the Watergate affair. It certainly could hurt people like Ford. But even if Nixon himself is permanently hurt, the electorate has a tendency to judge a man on his own record, not his degree of support for the President. Remember, Nixon had no positive coattails in 1968 and 1972, and this may mean he won't have any negative coattails either.

Q: Two states, Virginia and New Jersey, have gubernatorial races this year. Do you see any trend developing there which may foreshadow the 1974 races nationally?

A: Perhaps the most important thing to watch is the voter turnout. If it's low it may signal that the main consequence of Watergate is voter apathy. If anything will hurt the Republicans in those two races, it is much more likely to be the economy than Watergate. In Virginia, for example, Henry Howell is trying to run a populist campaign against the Republicans and, because of the economy, I suspect he may have a strong impact.

Q: Do you think campaign techniques will change in 1974 because of Watergate?

A: Yes, definitely. In the last few months I have heard a number of people in this business talking about placing a greater emphasis on organizational efforts—such as ringing doorbells—and decreasing reliance on television advertising. Especially because of the cynicism about politics deriving from Watergate, the public is apt to be extremely skeptical of campaigns that revolve around television or other types of media manipulation. Instead the emphasis is likely to be on people-to-people contact and on the nuts and bolts of political organization.

Q: Do you think the Watergate hearings have made presidential contenders out of the Republicans on the Ervin committee?

A: You certainly can't deny that Howard Baker is now a contender—especially after that recent poll which shows him running neck and neck with Ted Kennedy. But the same can't be said of Ed Gurney or Lowell Weicker. I ran Gurney's Senate campaign in 1968 and I know he isn't interested in national office. As for Weicker, he is so anti-administration, he could never be nominated by a Republican convention whatever his plans are.

Q: What about people like Nelson Rockefeller? He's far removed from Watergate and could campaign on a slogan like "I'm too rich to steal."

A: Rockefeller is no longer viewed as the same kind of guy orthodox Republicans opposed in 1964 and 1968. He's been a hell of a team player for Nixon—perhaps more loyal than any of the governors, including Reagan. But he may be handicapped by his age. I think John Connally makes a better bet.

Q: But won't Connally be subject to the same kind of scrutiny Agnew now faces? State government in Texas has never been clean; something suspect might turn up if reporters dig deep enough.

A: That could be. One thing I'm certain of is that 1976 will place the personal finances of presidential candidates under the greatest scrutiny in history, and it's possible you could find a lot more about a John Connally than, say, a Hubert Humphrey.

Q: Even if Agnew is not indicted, does the cloud of suspicion hanging over him rule him out for 1976?

A: No. If he comes out of this without an indictment, a lot of people will commend his forthright approach.

Foxes need your support!

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

It seems as though every few years the FOXES have a rather bad year, and then we must urge the fans to get out to the last few games and really help to keep professional baseball here in this great sports area. This is what we are doing now! This is what we so desperately need this year again, during the last two home stands. (The last one being only a one day stand.)

We had high hopes for a very successful season at the beginning of the year . . . but due to many unfortunate circumstances, . . . mistakes in judgement on the part of the White Sox (and also some local people, no doubt?) . . . bad weather, and a lot of little things have added up to an unfortunate year for The Foxes. . . Too many of the players sent here at the start of the season with The Deke were definitely not ready for such a tough league as The Midwest League. . . After Deacon's "reassignment" . . . we got the type of players we needed at the beginning of the year . . . we know too that many fans are upset about the release of some of the better players and this has caused some fans to stop coming! Despite all their problems The Ballclub is hanging in there in these final weeks . . . still in third place, not far out of second at this writing . . . For this the players deserve a lot of credit! Lets show them how much we appreciate their efforts . . . and give them our support in these last weeks of the season, so that despite the rather bad year . . . they will remember their stay in Appleton, and the surrounding area with fond memories of the Best Sports Area in the country . . . certainly the best Baseball Town!

Our slogan this year has been "Goodland Field" "THE PLACE TO BE IN '73," next year we hope to say "You'll enjoy More in '74." YOU can help us do that by getting out to Goodland Field during the Foxes final home stands. . . LET'S SEE YOU THERE!

VanZeeland project at Little Chute

LITTLE CHUTE—The entertainment booking agency of Gary VanZeeland Talents, Inc., is planning a development of office buildings, apartments and duplexes, and a shopping center on a 40-acre parcel of land on Outagamie County Trunk N (Freedom Road) between U.S. 41 and the Little Chute public high school.

The first building, an $85,000, two-story office facility with 4,200 square feet of floor space, has been completed and the firm will move its operations there this week. It will occupy the second floor and lease the first floor to another business.

VanZeeland Talents, owned and operated by Gary VanZeeland the past 10 years, intends to start construction Sept. 1 on a 10-unit office building which will be connected to the hexagon-shaped first building. The office units, which will be leased or sold condominium style, is scheduled for completion in about 18 months.

VanZeeland estimated the 10-unit building would cost about $500,000.

The other buildings in the planning stages are two buildings of 20 apartments each, one- and two-bedroom, and 10 duplexes, one- and two-bedroom. All will be rented or sold as condominium, VanZeeland said.

The development for the 40-acre parcel is scheduled to be completed within 10 years.

Creative resource firm opens

A new creative resource group called CONCEPT, has been formed and will specialize in marketing communications, emphasizing copywriting services, development of complete sales promotion programs and director mail, as well as newspaper, radio, television and magazine advertising.

Alan Hoppe, director, said that CONCEPT will offer these individual services to clients.

"We're organized to meet specific client needs, whether it's a single envelope stuffer or a coordinated multi-media campaign," he said. "This kind of flexibility puts professional planning and copy services within the range of any advertiser, no matter how modest his budget. It also gives large advertisers the opportunity to get a fresh, objective outlook on promotion problems while still maintaining relationships with their present resources."

Hoppe was formerly president of PM&H Associates, Ltd., Appleton, and still maintains an interest in that corporation. He is no longer active with that firm.

Credit unions soon celebrate 50th birthday

The "credit union idea" took hold in Wisconsin half a century ago with a handful of people with just a few dollars who felt they could help themselves by pooling their meager savings in their own financial organization and then lend these funds to one another at low interest rates.

Today, Wisconsin's credit union movement counts over 700 credit unions in all corners of the state. The member-owned financial service organizations now have assets exceeding $600,000 million and are serving more than 680,000 state residents.

Gov. Patrick Lucey has proclaimed October "Credit Union Month" in Wisconsin, observing that credit unions "provide their owner-members with low-cost consumer credit, combat usury and unfair credit practices and encourage thrift and individual responsibility."

The credit unions even plan a statewide birthday party, to be held during the annual meeting of the Wisconsin Credit Union League Sept. 14 and 15 in Green Bay.

Wisconsin's first credit union, Milwaukee Municipal Credit Union, was incorporated Oct. 3, 1923. Two weeks later the second was organized and became state chapter number 2.

A recent survey showed that, in their first 50 years, Wisconsin credit unions have been the source of more than five low-cost personal loans, totaling almost $3 billion, for their owner-members.

While the majority of the state's 700 credit unions have been formed by people who work together in the same industrial plant or office, there are now also many community type credit unions.

The survey, conducted by the office of the state credit union commissioner, shows that 455 state credit unions serve employees who work together in the same industrial or business firm and that there are 118 credit unions serving government employees; 54 are community credit unions; 56 serve members of the same parish and 40 are cooperative credit unions.

138 men installed in Eagles Club

Saturday night 138 men became official members of the newest Eagles Club in charter night activities at the new clubhouse, 527 N. Appleton St. The charter night activities also included the installation of over 100 wives, mothers and sisters into the auxiliary group of the fraternal organization.

The chartering of Aerie No. 3497 marks the return of the Eagles organization to Appleton. The previous chapter was dissolved many years ago, but efforts on the part of persistent Appleton Eagles, newcomers to the area familiar with the organization and Wigs Hall, a professional organizer from the national brotherhood made a chapter in Appleton a reality for the second time.

The Eagles, according to Edward Iversen, a charter member of the Appleton Aerie, "is primarily a fraternal service and social organization that aids both national and local charities as well as providing social activities for members and their wives, usually members of the auxiliary group, and families."

One member of the auxiliary is Mrs. Harold Boers, Appleton, who summed up the entire Eagles organization in the words of one of their mottos—"Eagles are people helping people."

Mrs. Boers outlined explained "the real center of the Eagles is the service minded focus of many of our activities." The various Eagle charities include providing college scholarships for needy Eagle dependents; the Durante Fund, named after Eagle member Jimmy Durante and designed to aid retarded children; heart and cancer research; programs for senior citizens and support of national legislation on such subjects as job for the handicapped, mother's pensions, workmen's compensations, social security and old age pensions.

Yet the Eagles are also a social group, using their clubhouse, the old Labor Temple now completely remodeled, for private parties, chapter social activities such as dances and dinners and such fund-raisers as a recent pizza smorgasbord.

"We enjoy the brotherhood of our organization," Iversen explained, "and believe that our organization helps to promote fellowship all over the world." With a membership of more than one million from Montreal to Manila and Alaska to Florida "Eagles are never without friends."

The organization is celebrating its 75th year of service by conducting membership drives to further expand their numbers in many of its communities, including the new Appleton chapter.

STRIPERS

brighten the days.

BY JEAN PEERENBOOM
Post-Crescent staff writer

"Teen-age volunteers are dedicated young people, who give of their time and talents to make our community a better place in which to live. They supply the extra pair 'of helping hands' that make a patient's stay in the hospital more comfortable and pleasant, an added touch," reads the junior hospital volunteers orientation pamphlet.

Each year high school students go to area hospitals to volunteer as Candy Stripers or Red Coats. At Memorial Hospital young women are called Candy Stripers and young men are Red Coats, while at St. Elizabeth Hospital both are called Candy Stripers.

Charlotte Podzilni, Candy Striper coordinator at Memorial, reported 52 teens turned out for her May orientation session, while Shirley Moors, volunteer coordinator at St. Elizabeth, reported 25 for June orientation.

Both coordinators are enthusiastic about the volunteer program for young people ages 16 to 19. Mrs. Podzilni remarked, "Summers would be disastrous if it weren't for the Candy Stripers filling in. They help patients get well by their presence. This is obvious by the way patients light up when the Stripers enter the room."

The Candy Stripers, who are associated with the American Hospital Association (AHA), are outfitted in a red and white pinafore and white blouse for the girls, and red and white striped jackets for the boys.

United Methodists examine roles of women

Food for thought

Mrs. Marie Coen, Appleton, and Robert Nelson, Hortonville, reflect on the role of women as presented by Pat Blanchard to a meeting at the Greenville-Center United Methodist Church.

BY ALICE K. HUCK
Post-Crescent staff writer

Area women and men who are regrouping their efforts in the fight for equal rights are learning much in the first of a series of sessions. Although women served the first of these sessions last Sunday at Greenville-Center United Methodist Church, where the role of women — past, present and future — has been discussed from 11:30 to 1:30 a.m. for four consecutive Sundays.

Pat Blanchard, president of the United Methodist Women's Club since January, 1972.

Most encouraging to Mrs. Blanchard has been response of the men. There was a feeling at first, she said, that women in their area had no voice although they admitted it was conceivable that there were difficulties in the times such as Appleton.

Mrs. Blanchard's active efforts on behalf of women's rights evolved in July after she attended the United Methodist Church School of Missions at Pueblo. It was there she learned that the first woman licensed to preach was a Methodist and that the first woman to be ordained was from the United Brethren Church.

She was made aware that the precedent-setting fight for women to control their own activities through the church really began in 1844 when the Boston Female Society for Missionary Purposes was organized by Mary Webb. Through the next several years, she was told, female societies sprang up throughout New England and beyond. Especially popular were the Cent Socities with membership dues of a cent a week, 12 cents a year.

Three books have been used as the basis for Mrs. Blanchard's weekly presentation. They are "Women Over Half the Earth's People — A Guide to Resources and Progress" by Ellen Kirby, "Women in Church and Society" by Georgia Harkness, and "Ordination: Securing to a Woman" by Elaine Magala.

Themes for the four sessions have been: Overview — definitions and perceptions; "Women — Past and Present — church and secular"; "Nitty Gritty — old and new issues"; and "Role of women and men and role of women in the church."

At the first session, Mrs. Blanchard passed out what she called a "conscience-raising" questionnaire. This questionnaire was the at 8:00 p.m. Pat remarked, but more than that it got the women thinking about men and their role as a person.

The questionnaires are not evaluated by the meeting, but are taken home to be thought about. The questions follow: "Who is the greatest living man today?" "Who is the greatest living woman today?"

Last two days we have offended your deepest...

Was it easier to remember men or women?

Last five husbands, men you admire, last five husbands, women you admire.

A married woman must have children, is that true? Comment.

Did you ever wish you were of the other sex? What?

What does the church tell a woman she is?

What are three roles commonly played by men in the church?

What are three roles commonly played by women in the church?

Do you feel a woman can be as effective as a man in ministry? Why?

What is the purpose of United Methodist Women?

Mrs. Blanchard explained that first steps for equality in the church began with concern for women in far-off countries who were much more degraded.

Women who previously had gone to other countries only as the wives of missionaries, became interested in what they could do as "persons" in the field.

Pat Blanchard said that she had not always been a woman's rights advocate. In 1972, she said, she was a housewife, a mother, a volunteer, a church member, a church worker, a church leader.

She said she had not always been a woman's rights advocate. In 1972, she said, she was a housewife, a mother, a volunteer, a church member, a church worker, a church leader.

Mrs. Blanchard feels that because of her course at Pueblo and the reading she has done since then she now has a foundation for her belief in women's rights and equal opportunities.

She made her decision to try to share this belief with the church because "the church has given so much to me, and to our family."

Mrs. Blanchard is upset about how long it has taken for women to follow up what other women started over 125 years ago when the first Woman's Rights Convention was held in Seneca Falls, New York.

When asked why she thinks it has taken so long to do so, she replied: "Women are their own worst enemies."

She elaborated on this remark by saying that women who are secure in themselves are jealous of other women and hate to see them get ahead.

It has been crammed into everybody's mind that woman's role is that of "housewife" and to some women this is their only identity. "I've added," she said, "that they're being put down, they start getting defensive. That, combined with jealousy, is the real problem."

Pat Blanchard speaks as a woman who is a happily married, mother of girls seven and four-year-old, homemaker in a lovely new residence, and co-worker in Blanchard's Speed Shop in Medina.

Although her main job is being a housewife, Pat works out-of-state for parts, works behind the counter when necessary and admits to being able to do anything in the shop except the machine work. "I guess I could do that if necessary," she adds.

Despite her six years in the shop, a person who comes in for the first time might ask, "Is there anyone around who knows anything about parts?"

When asked about priorities in the equal rights arena, Mrs. Blanchard said, "Priorities should be everyone for themselves. Woman's right to lead her life as she wishes in areas of employment — married or single — and in life style (in one spot, or moving around). It is right for women to just be equal."

Part of her philosophy is wrapped up in one quote from the Harkness book: "The subordination of women as if they were inferior beings, and the resultant reduction of the status of women to that of adjuncts to men, whether sexually, domestically, or professionally, are a denial of the basic equality of the sexes as made in the image of God."

How long will it take?

Role of color in our lives

BY FRANCES DIETRICH

Color is synonymous with summer. This is because there is more sunlight, which is a combination of all colors. When the sun falls on a red rose, it looks more brilliant than when it is seen in shadow. The red wave lengths of the sun are being reflected by the rose, while the other colors of the spectrum are being absorbed. It is not simply because more light is focused on the rose.

In summer, flowers abound, trees are in leaf, and there is a feeling of buoyancy because we are surrounded by color. Color is complex, affecting us physically and psychologically.

Undoubtedly, it was the desire for personal adornment with color that inspired ancient peoples to paint their bodies and later, to develop fabric dyeing as an art. It was a painstaking and not always reliable process, as all dyestuffs were derived from natural sources such as plants, shells, tree bark and even insects. It was not until 1956 that the first synthetic dye was developed.

Even today, after years of research and development, all colors are not enduring under all exposures to light, perspiration, washing, drycleaning, crocking (color rubbing off dry fabric), fumes and sea water.

Look for clues to colorfastness in hang tags, labels and advertising. Fiber-dyed means the fibers have been dyed before the yarns were spun. Yarn-dyed means yarns were dyed before weaving. Solution-dyeing refers to man-made fibers, with color introduced into the solution before the fibers were extruded through the holes of the spinneret. These three methods usually mean that the fabric is colorfast to light, perspiration, washing and drycleaning.

When cloth is dyed after weaving, it has been piece-dyed. This is the most economical method of coloring fabric. Var-dyeing of piece goods provides a high degree of colorfastness for cotton, rayons and linen.

Most fabrics of man-made fiber are not made of solution-dyed yarns, as this would require the maintenance of costly inventories. However, dyes and methods of dyeing have been developed for piece-dyeing man-made fabric, which provide good fastness to light and laundering. An exception is acetate. Unless solution-dyed, acetate fabric should be drycleaned as it is subject to fading and running.

Because of the varying degrees in which man-made fibers absorb dyes, cross-dyeing has been developed. This is a fascinating method, which provides the consumer with a type of fabric not available with any other color process.

Dissimilar fibers such as polyester and rayon maybe woven together and the fabric put in a dye bath of a single color which will result in a two-color or heather effect.

Two or more fibers, such as nylon, rayon, acrylic and polyester may be combined in one cloth, then put into a bath of several acid dyes, combining blue, yellow and red. The nylon accepts the blue, rayon the yellow, acrylic will take the red, and the polyester will remain white. The result is a four-color fabric from a single "bath" because each of the dyes was attracted to the fiber for which it had an affinity.

Reader service: You can try one of the most fascinating methods of fabric coloring. It is the art of batik which originated centuries ago in Indonesia and is being revived in this country for home furnishings and apparel. Write for free pamphlet, "Beautiful Batik," which provides directions. Send long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Frances Dietrich, in care of The Post-Crescent.

Looking at pictures helps

Dear Ann Landers: May I speak in behalf of old gaffers who stash girly pictures? I am one of them.

Women can't understand the male sex drive because they don't have it. It's a physical appetite, an animal lust. A mature man can refuse to cater to these instincts, but the cost is high in terms of tension and anxiety. If girly pictures help, why not?

I wouldn't trade my wife for Aphrodite, but when I hanker after something different I look at my "harem" of redheads, blondes and raven-tressed sirens. That's all I need. Believe me, Ann, I wouldn't go across the street to be with one of these women. All I want is to enjoy their pictures.

Tell the wives who are upset to think about it this way: If your aging Romeo is stashing photos, comfort yourself with the fact that he loves you too much to go on the prowl. Don't feel that you are inadequate. You aren't. He is. Keep loving him because he loves you. His childish behavior doesn't reflect on that love any more than his yen for sauerkraut. —Dayton Looker

Dear Dayton: You sound like a sweet, harmless, plain-spoken case of arrested development. Thanks for writing.

Dear Ann Landers: Our son, age 16, is going with an attractive girl who is 15. Linda is well-mannered and likable. The problem is her parents' idea of discipline.

The girl can have two dates a week, Friday and Saturday night. She must be at home by 12:30 a.m. So far, so good—but listen to the rest of it. Her parents are very strict about her being in on time but once she is home her date can stay as late as he pleases.

Last night Willard came in at 4:10 a.m. I was worried sick but my husband wouldn't let me phone Linda's house to check and see if he was there. Question: If Willard stays beyond 1 a.m., would it be proper to call and ask the girl's father to send him home? Or should we sit tight (my husband's idea) and let the boy use his own judgment? —Mum And Pappy

Dear M. and P.: You've been letting

The ailing house Cherries thwarted by bugs

By ROGER C. WHITMAN

Q: I raise Jerusalem cherries from seedlings, and in order for them to produce cherries I have to put them outdoors in the summer. Each year, when I bring them indoors, I wash the leaves thoroughly. Then I have been spraying them with alcohol, as there are tiny white bugs which seem to resist my efforts. Oddly enough, these bugs haven't really bothered the plants which look healthy. But I would like to get rid of them. If you could identify these bugs for me, I can do the rest. My neighbors can't help me. —Baltimore.

A: From your description and my own similar experiences with Jerusalem cherries (also a Gardenia someone gave my wife) I can tell you right now those bugs are pests known as mealy bugs.

Q: Our 15-year-old home has Formica counter and tabletops. Very durable and good looking. But now the surfaces have become dull and look their age, although still very smooth. Could I put on varnish? Any other ideas? —Chicago.

A: Forget the varnish. You'd have to sand down all the gloss remaining on the surface for a good bond. Instead, use a good auto wax, well rubbed and buffed. This will restore shine and look nice. It won't be permanent, however. You'll have to rewax once in a while, depending on wear and tear.

Q: The sliding door of my downstairs powder room is not properly adjusted. Not vertical, it doesn't hang right. Something is the matter with one of the rollers, maybe both of them. Is there a book you can recommend with details on how I can get this door fixed? —Glenview, Ill.

A: "Basic Home Repairs," one of the many Sunset Books, is excellent. It has clear diagrams, clear descriptions. Published by Lane Publishing Co., Menlo Park, Calif. 94025. $1.95, unless inflation has set in recently.

the boy use his own judgment and it's terrible.

Set a curfew for Willard and see that he abides by it or suffers the consequences. Just because boys don't get pregnant doesn't mean they should be allowed to run wild.

Dear Ann Landers: A man I've been dating asked me if I would consider marrying him. I said I didn't know. He replied, "I'm not so sure about you, either." Then he pulled a piece of paper out of his pocket and presented a list of questions he wants answered:

Do you need any dental work done? Do you owe any large debts? Do you have any allergies? Have you had your appendix or gall bladder out?

I was shocked. He explained that his ex-wife clipped him for huge medical and dental bills, a bank loan, etc., and he wasn't going to make the same mistake again. What do you think of a man who would place such conditions on marriage? —Miss Baffled

Dear Baff: I think you don't need a creep like that for a husband. Suggest that he run an ad.

Pilot project at Mercy Center extends services

By EDITH BOCK
Post-Crescent staff writer

OSHKOSH—Shirley Yaeger has the only job of its kind in the Fox Valley, a new position in a new service to this community.

Her title is continuing care coordinator at Mercy Medical Center, a position she has filled since May 14 when it was established.

Coordination of continuing care is an arm of the medical center's social services department, extending concern for patient welfare beyond the hospital walls.

"It's a big challenge," Mrs. Yaeger said of the job, the work of setting goals and procedures for delivery of the service, and familiarizing herself with community agencies.

Viewed as a pilot project, the coordination of continuing care is designed to utilize community nursing, health, and other resources available to patients after discharge from the hospital.

"It's a natural follow-up to hospital care," Mrs. Yaeger explained, "because so many people don't know where to go for help."

Her job helps answer questions patients ask. When can I go home, doctor? Where can I go when I leave the hospital? How much can I do for myself? Who will take care of me?

With the coordinator's help, patients often leave the hospital sooner, assured of competent convalescent care at less cost. Many are happier in familiar surroundings and recovery is pleasanter.

For the medical center, it means that needed beds are released sooner for critically ill patients in need of the sophisticated hospital skills and equipment.

Plans are eventually to use the coordinator as a community medical referral service as well, available to provide information on how and where to find needed medical assistance.

People new to the community; people requiring medical advice or supplies for the first time will find directions on how to proceed from the coordinator.

With Mrs. Yaeger as coordinator, the service has potential as a teaching and health information resource, too. A former obstetrics nurse, Mrs. Yaeger is participating in a seminar for unwed mothers at Oshkosh Technical Institute and sponsored by the Winnebago County Association for Mental Health.

"We think there will be other opportunities to help with community projects," she said.

Her work as coordinator, Mrs. Yaeger said, begins with a referral from the physician, the floor nurses, or the social worker.

She talks with the physician, then with the patient and often with the family. According to requirements, she puts the patient or the family in touch with the Visiting Nurse Association, public health nurses, Homemakers, Inc., and other community resources.

"I like an early referral," she said. "It gives time to know the patient and the family and what the situation really is."

When the evaluation calls for long term care, there is discussion of nursing homes, foster homes, and other facilities.

"Sometimes it helps a patient reach a decision when he knows more about the resources available," Mrs. Yaeger said.

Tentative arrangements are checked with the attending physician to make sure they meet after care requirements.

If the patient can go home but needs nursing assistance, VNA and public health nurses evaluate the home situation and round up equipment. Regular calls are scheduled. Mercy social workers help with the placement of patients going into nursing and foster homes.

"I think I save the doctor's time a little," Mrs. Yaeger said. "—try to provide him with a good feedback from the patient conferences. It helps him to understand the situation."

Some patients are eager to go home, but afraid the family isn't willing to shoulder the responsibility. "I talk it over and often find the family is anxious to have the patient at home."

"It makes things easier to talk with a third person."

One of the most satisfactory solutions was for an elderly couple, she recounted. The husband, who was partially handicapped, was hospitalized first. Later, the wife was admitted. They visited during the hospital stay in different wards.

It didn't seem likely that the wife could resume her care of her husband while she was recuperating. But they figured out what needed to be done and found VNA home nursing would fill their requirements.

"They were able to go home and stay together with VNA help," Mrs. Yaeger concluded. "They were so happy about being nearly self sufficient again."

The new continuing coordinator has been connected with Mercy Medical Center for about nine years.

A native of Clintonville, she was graduated from Mercy School of Nursing in 1967 and was a registered nurse that August when she joined the medical center staff.

"I know most of the doctors and nurses and the physical setup here. That helps in this job."

She and her husband, Daniel, who works for Azco Construction, Appleton, have a daughter, 8, and a son, 4.

The new Mercy Medical Center service began as the result of a health care study undertaken in 1968 by the Oshkosh Area United Fund, Brian Boegel, director of hospital social services, said.

The study concluded that a number of available community services weren't being utilized to full capacity. It was suggested that Mercy develop a referral service to these health agencies.

Medical Center administrators and medical staff endorsed the project. A subcommittee of the health study committee decided a coordinator was the answer, wrote the job description and recruitment procedure.

Funding of the one to two year pilot project is shared by Mercy Medical Center and the Oshkosh Foundation, whose participation continues the community support of the program.

Boegel said it is anticipated that Mercy Medical Center will support the program after the pilot period if it proves successful.

Beyond the hospital

Shirley Yaeger, R.N. is responsible for extending concern for Mercy Medical Center patients beyond the hospital walls. Her position is a new one in the community, funded as a pilot program.

Dirt build-up disgusts mom

I have never known my mother to come for a visit that she did not open my oven door, clutch her throat and gasp, "What happened?"

If there was ever a West Pointer in an apron, it is Mother. She has always believed God will forgive a woman for infidelity if she cleans her oven regularly, that there is virtue in waxing behind the refrigerator and that if the Good Lord had meant for you to leave ironing boards up, he would have made them with legs you couldn't trip over.

On the other hand, I have always contended dust was put on earth so we could measure time, cantaloupe-flavored ice cubes are a delicacy, and you can survive this whole domestic scene if you keep your lint trap closed.

In the kitchen together, we are referred to (among other things) as the Odd Couple.

"Where are those copper bottom pans I bought you that you could see your face in?" she asked.

"Right in front of you, hangin on the rack," I said.

"You're joking!" she said, eyeing the black-bottomed saucepan. "Why don't you sprinkle a little cleanser on them each time you use them? Why, my garbage cans look better than this. I can cook in my garbage cans."

"Why would you want to do that?" I asked.

"The point is, Missy, that they are that shiny. I don't understand it. You weren't raised to let your bottoms go."

"Open the oven, Mother, I want to slide in this casserole."

"Your light is burnt out," she said poking her head in the opening.

"Not really," I said patiently. "The light got spattered with steaks."

"When did you have steaks?" she asked.

"Kids!" I yelled. "When did we have steaks?"

"If you would just wipe up the spots as soon as they happen you wouldn't have all that corrosion," she explained.

"Before I leave I will defrost your refrigerator, get the wax build-up off your floors, restore order to these cupboards and I'll see what I can do to this oven."

"Hey Mom!" yelled one of my sons. "I just remembered. We had the steaks on Brucie's birthday, last October."

Mother steadied herself on the countertop. "I'll talk to God about you, but don't get your hopes built up."

Life's a working symphony for new orchestra manager

By ANN CURLEY
NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — "It's not necessary to be a musician to manage a symphony orchestra," says Catherine French, "but it is necessary to know musicians and understand them."
"Miss French should know. She's the newly appointed manager of the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra, a rare position for a woman. She assumed the behind-the-scenes operation of the orchestra in January and says she is "still learning so much."

But the 26-year-old orchestra manager considers the work of the 93 musicians and music director Henry Lewis "really fantastic."

A 15-member administrative staff headed by Miss French handles such details as engaging musicians and soloists, scheduling concerts, hiring halls, arranging for promotion and transporting equipment to concert sites.

"Every area of staff work is aimed at enabling the orchestra to give its best performance," declares the New Jersey native, who commutes from her home town of Bergenfield to the orchestra's headquarters in Newark's Symphony Hall.

With 103 concerts scheduled during the 1972-73 season, including appearances throughout the country, it's like being on tour all the time, she says.

A student of piano and organ as a youngster, the new orchestra manager admits she disliked practicing and had "no desire to ever be a performer." Her interest in music, however, led to a degree in music history at Oanhattanville College in Purchase, N.Y.

She discovered the administrative side of the field as business manager and treasurer of the college glee club and through part-time work for the music department. After graduating in 1968, she became assistant to the manager of Leopold Stokowski's American Symphony Orchestra in New York City.

When Miss French was appointed executive director and manager of that orchestra in 1970 at the age of 23, she was the youngest person to hold such a post with a major American symphony. Her work there continued until the orchestra ceased operations last year.

"What all of us want," she says of her work with the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra, "is to serve the state of New Jersey — all areas and all the people." She points out that the current 50th anniversary season includes family concerts and performances for young people, as well as regular adult concerts.

"The time is quickly passing when a single city has an orchestra and expects people to come to it," Miss French believes, citing the 31 communities in which the musicians must appear this season. "If society supports the artist, the artist must serve society. You have to go where people are if you have something to offer that you want to share with them."

Although a classical music lover with special admiration for Beethoven, she feels that "all symphonies have come to the point where they realize how important it is to serve American composers and do contemporary music — and we do that here income for the orchestra, the manager notes.

"Our aim from a business standpoint," she adds, "is to increase earned income. People have to be convinced that it (the orchestra) is worth giving to."

Having started her new job at a "pretty hectic" time on the symphony calendar, Miss French finds few occasions for some of her favorite non-musical pursuits like playing backgammon and reading mystery stories.

Hours not filled by office work, concerts or rehearsals often are spent at Carnegie Hall hearing other orchestras and artists.

But she likes seeing all the details of orchestra management tie together to produce a successful performance.

"I like the total work," she comments. "I really enjoy seeing the end result. If things go right we have an enthusiastic orchestra and an enthusiastic audience."

in health careers, such as medical technology, nursing, physical therapy and pediatrics, and want to become acquainted with hospital life, while others want to fill empty hours of summer vacations. Many volunteers enjoy the summer work enough to continue throughout the school year, as their time permits.

Objectives and characteristics of a volunteers are listed in the orientation booklets. A Candy Stripper is compassionate, cheerful, responsible, dependable, neat and, lastly, he or she must be able to keep a confidence.

The booklet tells us that the program, which acquaints the high school students with the principles and practice of caring for the sick and with the function of the hospital, also promotes and maintains high standards of volunteer workers and stimulates hospital service careers.

Candy Stripers and Red Coats are kept busy delivering newspapers and flowers to patients, talking to them, writing letters and shampooing hair. They escort them to physical therapy sessions and to radiology and other departments. Some of the young people work in the gift shops, emergency rooms, pharmacies or x-ray rooms at each hospital.

Volunteer service is rewarded with pins, badges and charms. After 15 hours of service in one year at St. Elizabeth, volunteers receive a badge from the AHA; after 100, they are entitled to a pin. Memorial Stripers receive a medical charm for the girls' bracelets after 15 hours, while Red Coats receive a pin.

"It makes me feel great that young people are willing to help," Mrs. Moors tells her orientation group, but adds, "the volunteer program is only as effective as the volunteers themselves."

Flowers for the patient

Red Coat Ted DeGroot hands Margaret Giebisch her morning paper while Candy

Striper Jean VanHout presents her with a plant at Memorial Hospital.

Guests shown consideration

A family of guests can put a burden on bathroom facilities, so think about this before company arrives. If facilities can't withstand much additional use, work out a bath schedule that insures ample hot water for each bather.

Other considerations include having a good supply of clean towels and washcloths handy and enough towel racks to go around. Additional standing racks may be set up quickly. Or, if space is scarce, put a freestanding towel rack or hooks in guest bedrooms.

Put out fresh bars of soap for sinks, bathtubs and shower stalls and keep a reserve supply in a large apothecary jar of decorative bowl.

Designing woman can keep a secret

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures Writer

As a woman in a man's work world, Mimi Ornes, 27, an automotive designer at the Ford Design Center, has proved she can keep a secret.

Invited by the International Motor Press to talk on her favorite subject, car interiors, Mimi said a lot ... but she didn't tell much about the interior of the new Mustang, her particular project, which will soon be unveiled.

She told them it was difficult to get past the front gate at Ford (and if one did manage, the design studios are normally off limits); that her definition of design is that it must combine aesthetics and utility; that industrial designers had proved that mass-produced consumer goods can be attractive as well as useful, and she also gave a slide show which included some renderings of the new car.

Later in an interview Mimi told a bit about what it is like to be a woman "in a man-oriented company." She should have a lot of clout, she remarked, but sometimes she is up against seniority. "They may have been designing or assembling a certain part the same way for years and if you come up with a little different idea, they would choose the way they have always done it," she said.

Women could bring a new design dimension to the auto business, but Mimi is the first to agree "that design isn't always good for the sake of change," even though the consumer may wonder why things stay the same. But she is making progress.

"In fact some of the new features in the new car are offered only in luxury bracket cars — hand stitching, luxury carpet, and so on," she said.

In new cars soon one will see two-tone colors "which haven't been around since the 1960s." The two-color idea might give the interior the layered look so popular in fashion, but generally speaking there has been no effort recently to design cars with woman appeal, she insists. They are mainly unisex.

One thing that makes her happy — she likes small cars — the new redesigned car will be 19 inches smaller than the 1965 model, and that is the trend, she observed. American cars are being influenced by European design.

"Strangely enough product planners always start out with a nice-size car, but they usually get carried away and keep adding to it until it is just too big."

Auto designers have the interest of the public at heart, she feels, but they, too, may have difficulty getting designs past long-time employees.

She is sometimes talked out of something good because the product planning group doesn't have the product she wants to use. She tries to change their suggestions and sometimes she succeeds. On the new car there is a package tray that she managed to have approved and there is a long European-style arm-rest, which pleases her. In addition, retractors for belts and harnesses will be hidden. The new car will have complete instrumentation as standard equipment.

"They are really trying to put a good car in a small package. There is always give and take and you must keep hammering away to get what you want."

Of the 1,000 people at the design studios, 125 are designers, who are always "researching car lines and watching the European and Japanese market." They make plans far ahead, she says.

For example, talk is that the future will bring little urban shopper cars, lightweight and molded, that can scoot in and out of parking places. These may even have the digital solid circuitry of the dashboard which other cars will have.

Mimi studied product design at the Ontario College of Art in Toronto. From her current job of 3½ years, she could become a senior designer which would give her more responsibility and she might be directing two or three other designers. At the moment her jobs are outlined by a senior designer.

Her husband, Al, is manager of the Advanced Exterior Studio.

Synthetics are perfect for fall

The shortage of natural fibers, particularly wool, has caused designers and textile manufacturers to make even more fall fashions for '73 in synthetics. Many of them simulate the naturals but have the advantage of washability, reports The Soap and Detergent Association.

velveteens, wool-like jerseys, sweater knits, fake furs and flannels. Tailorability is not sacrificed, and many designers find that the man-made fabrics print more colorfully than the naturals. The lighter weight of synthetics can mean more comfortable, year round wear. Synthetic/natural blends are often used for suits, pants, skirts and dresses.

YOUR SATISFACTION IS OUR GOAL

Laird bruised in inner-circle battles

BY TIM WYNGAARD
Special to The Post-Crescent

WASHINGTON —The west wing of the White House is where the hidden working offices are, away from the lavish and historic formal quarters through which tourists traipse.

It is here, up three flights of narrow stairs, that Mel Laird has his new office.

And it is here that the impression solidifies that Laird may be badly bruised and battered from nine weeks of fighting for his political life within the Nixon administration.

"This doesn't help me, you know, to be here in the White House as counselor to the President for domestic affairs. I'm here to help somebody else. . . the President. I'm here to help my country."

"There is no who's 'out to get me,'" he says of the constantly rumored in-fighting between the old and new factions within the White House.

"I'd be better off if they 'got me'. I didn't plan to come back into government this way, you know. I had a lot else I wanted to do," he says of the cherished dreams abandoned weeks after leaving office as Secretary of Defense.

"I'm over 21. I can take care of myself," he says with his characteristic open-faced grin, trying to close the sore subject. But the subject won't stay closed.

What of the Pentagon release of the damaging memo showing Laird's role in secret Cambodian bombing starting early in 1969?

No, he admits, no one checked with him before releasing the information, denied by Laird just a week before. But Pentagon officials said they thought they were supporting him by releasing the document, he contends.

He never advocated falsifying bomb lists, he says. He ordered his staff simply to refuse to talk about Cambodia and to talk only about Vietnam, he argues.

"I told them to keep their mouths shut."

Then, heatedly of his new—and old—critics in the press, he adds, "People who want to get 'secrecy' tied up with 'falsification' just don't understand the English language."

Yes, he admits, the economy will be the major domestic issue in the 1974 elections—an area in which he has little voice, despite expectations here when he was appointed the superpower assistant to the President for all domestic matters.

"I'm no great economist," Laird says simply.

Likewise, you are left with the impression that hopes for an "open administration" which grew in response to the appointments of Laird and Bryce Harlow have been shattered.

The White House tapes have not been released, despite Laird's urgings.

The President will say little more of the Watergate affair, Laird suggests this morning after the President's televised address to the nation on policies of wrong-doing. Most of the basic questions have been handled as far as he is concerned, Laird says of Nixon's Watergate speech.

That weekend a column was leaked, stating that Laird warned top Republicans not to spring to Agnew's defense, or they might find themselves embarrassingly faced with a later Agnew indictment. After the column sank forcefully into the political consciousness, Laird denied the report, despite the fact that it was written by a columnist long close to him.

Aug. 26, 1973 Sunday Post-Crescent, Appleton-Neenah-Menasha, Wis. A-4

It set the White House a careful step apart from the troubled Vice President but hurt Laird deeply with many Agnew Republicans.

Laird repeatedly turns the conversation to lengthy discussions on what he can win for the administration from Congress to "get moving again," echoing Nixon's theme of the night before against Watergate critics.

"I spent 16 years in Congress on the defense appropriations subcommittee and four as secretary of defense.

"I think I can make some contributions," he repeats. "I'm not doing this to help myself. 'I'm doing this because the President asked me to. I'm doing this because my friends on the Hill asked me to."

As you descend the stairs you are left with the impression that Mel Laird has lost some very tough battles in the inner reaches of the White House.

Warren not committed to gubernatorial race

BY JOHN WYNGAARD
Post-Crescent staff writer

MADISON —For more than two years Atty. Gen. Robert Warren has been reading press clippings describing him as the virtually certain nominee of the Republican party for governor in 1974, as the result of his impressive survival in the 1970 elections when Gov. Patrick J. Lucey led the Democratic party to its most satisfying state election victory in this century.

But as some of Warren's most loyal supporters and oldest admirers press him to make a commitment for a campaign for governor next year, when they presume that Gov. Lucey will be seeking a second four-year term, they are learning that the attorney general is not yet willing to do so.

Such importunings are growing in number and urgency, as Republican organization loyalists acknowledge the weakened condition of their state party treasury, the probable strength of the Lucey-led 1974 ticket of the Democrats, the lack of widely known or acceptable candidate alternatives, and the traditional rule that the challenging party needs more time to carry its message to the electorate.

Among such considerations, some of the experienced pro-Warren Republicans feel the party organization's extraordinarily weak financial consideration is the most important. With a debt of $500,000, and donor receipts apparently equal only to the cost of interest on the party's notes and its state office overhead disbursements, they have concluded that a credible campaign for their favorite will be possible only if they organize a separate financing group. They are aware also that its success will depend in considerable degree upon an early start, preferably this fall.

Such calculations do not suggest that the Warren fans are indifferent to a party organization convention endorsement of the attorney general, probably next June. But they are convinced that the party apparatus won't be as helpful as in past years in supporting the costs of an endorsed ticket. In many past years, endorsed slates were almost completely underwritten with party funds.

Warren has given all the outward appearances of campaigning. He receives more invitations for party rallies, and luncheon meetings and caucuses than any other personality in Republican state politics. He accepts more of them than any Republican contemporary of state-wide recognition. Press accounts of such events regularly describe him as the "titular leader" of the state party, although Secretary of State Robert Zimmerman collected more votes during his successful campaign in the last election, and precedes him in constitutional rank. Zimmerman, however, has made it clear in scores of statements that he wants no other political place than the one he has held for many years, and where he succeeded his father who had held it for many years earlier.

Yet such an energetic schedule of purely political activity does not surely mean that he will run for governor, or wants to run for governor, according to the most knowledgeable sources available.

Among other "options", in the parlance of the modern political manager, these are usually suggested:

1. An open candidacy for an appointment by the White House to a new district federal judgeship in Wisconsin, if the long-pending claim of Rep. Glenn Davis of the Wisconsin ninth district is rejected again, as is assumed in some informed quarters. Davis has been opposed on the grounds of insufficient actual experience as a practicing lawyer, in an American Bar Association report, among others.

2. A campaign for re-election to the attorney general's office, in which he would be favored to win on the showing he made in 1970 in a year of enormous Democratic gains in Wisconsin on other fronts.

3. A return to private life and professional practice, which would almost surely be more remunerative than political office, a consideration not lightly dismissed by a man in middle life who has costly family responsibilities.

4. A bid for his party's nomination for U. S. Senator, which would probably be as easily available as a gubernatorial nomination from a party that has not yet given any hint that any of its widely known figures is chafing for the chance to encounter Sen. Gaylord Nelson, Democratic incumbent.

Female investor successfully overcame numerous obstacles

Aug. 26, 1973 Sunday Post-Crescent, Appleton-Neenah-Menasha, Wis. C-14

KALAMAZOO, Mich. (AP) — Six well-dressed district managers were gathered solemnly around the conference table. At the head of the group sat Josephine Starkweather, tapping her fingers.

"C'mon in," she called to a visitor. "I was just getting ready to chew my men out."

The room broke up with laughter.

The atmosphere wasn't so jovial five years earlier, when Mrs. Starkweather was named divisional manager at Investors Diversified Services. Some top producers among the 35 licensed sales people threatened to quit.

But Robert Chandler, one of those sales representatives, says the obstacles have been overcome.

Success in selling mutual funds, investment certificates life insurance, annuities and tax-exempt bonds didn't come easily to the mother of five. She answered a job ad at age 46 when her husband became ill.

"I wasn't about to sit behind a typewriter," she said. "I had five kids to support. It was either work for a company like IDS or sell real estate."

Mrs. Starkweather made $1,000 her first month in the business. Times, however, were still tough. Her newly remodeled farm home burned to the ground shortly after she got the new job. A back injury hospitalized her and doctors said she might never walk again.

"I gotta walk," she told them. And she did. Later, divorced and in need of money to pay college tuition of $1,000 for four children, Mrs. Starkweather made $1,400 in commissions the evening before the checks were due.

"My kids never considered what I did as work," Mrs. Starkweather said. "At the time, I looked upon it as hard work though."

What the Starkweather children viewed as something their mother enjoyed doing provided financing for careers in medicine, mechanical engineering, flight instruction and real estate, high counseling and tool and die work. After putting five children through college, she thought everyone should plan ahead to finance educations for children.

Once, she sold a young couple on such a premise, thinking they already had two children. Six months later she received a telephone call. "We've decided to use the educational investment program you sold us," the young husband said. "My wife just discovered she's pregnant."

At 22, Jo Starkweather's name was splashed across front pages of Chicago's newspapers in 1937 when she was kidnapped by a paroled convict who made her drive him to Chicago. She managed to talk the man into releasing her, and even convinced him to return her engagement ring.

Last year, Mrs. Starkweather made about $45,000 and says it's just one measure of success. She hopes to make more when she is transferred to Lansing, from her Kalamazoo post.

"I'll be 60 years old this summer, but I'm really excited about this new challenge," Mrs. Starkweather said.

Another goal before retirement is recruiting more women into her company's national sales staff. There are now about 150 among 4,000 employees.

"This is a tremendous field for women," she said, "but you must be motivated. To see if a gal has the guts and motivation for this work I tell her to go out and ask 10 people what they think of the investment business. If she has trouble doing that, I get a pretty good indication she isn't cut out for it."

Talking to men about money as a sales representative was never a problem for IDS's only woman divisional sales manager.

"I never tried to snow them," she said. "If I didn't know the answer I told them so, and that was quite frequently."

Means business

Jo Starkweather is successful in the investment counseling field. One of her goals, she says, is to recruit more women into her company's national sales staff.

Good cleaning keeps jewelry sparkling

For the nicest glints and gleams in precious, semi-precious and costume jewelry, take a little time to keep it clean.

Translucent gems — diamonds, emeralds, sapphires, rubies — are generally very hard, and can be soaked in a soap or detergent solution to help loosen dirt particles from the settings. Brush gently with a small brush, and rinse in warm water.

Non-translucent stones, such as pearls, opals and turquoises, are delicate and easily damaged. Whisk these through mild soap suds, rinse and pat dry with a soft towel.

Gold jewelry without stones should be soaked in warm, soapy solutions to remove accumulations of dirt. Rinse in warm water and polish dry. Costume jewelry should be wiped regularly with a soft, damp cloth. Handle all jewelry gently and store without contact with other jewelry.

Skip flour sifting

Flour needs to be sifted only for very light cakes. For most recipes, skip this step to save time. Simply spoon flour lightly into measuring cup; do not scoop, shake or tap the cup and do not tamp flour down. Then level off the extra flour with straight edge of a knife or spatula.

Third no-hitter brings LL title

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — Twainan City, Taiwan, won, won the Little League World Series Saturday on its third straight no-hitter, beating Tucson, Ariz. 12-0.

Huang Ching-Hui, who pitched a perfect game in the opener of the eight-team series, struck out 16 Tucson batters he faced, walking one and another player reach base on an infield error.

Tucson southpaw Mike Fimmers held Taiwan scoreless for the first three innings, but yielded three in the fourth on a home run, an error, a single, a wild pitch and two passed balls.

Fimmers, who had suffered an attack of asthma was lifted in the fifth and replaced by Mike Martinez, who gave up nine runs in the last two innings on six hits.

Second baseman Scheng Cehng Pasheng, Taiwan's leading batter in the series, was 4-for-4 with a double and homerun. Huang and outfielder Kuo Wen-li also hit roundtrippers, giving Taiwan an even dozen in its three games. It was the fifth batting mark shattered by the team.

Taiwan's 57 runs in games against Tucson, Bitburg (Germany AFB) and Tampa, Fla., broke the old series record of 34 set in 1962.

Huang paralyzed the Tucson team and amazed a estimated crowd at 32,000 with an overpowering fastball. He gave up a first-inning walk to centerfielder Tony Bravo with one out, stranding him by striking out the side.

In the fourth, Martinez reached first when Cheng bobbled a ground ball, but was erased on an attempted steal.

The Taiwan players were booed as they took the field, a result of their overwhelming performances the first two games.

But Fimmers' sharply dropping curve confused the Taiwan batters for the first time in the series. Until the fielding errors of the fourth, it was anybody's game.

Volunteer Little League officials from the throughout the U.S. began complaining in mid week about Taiwan's domination of the Little League. Taiwan won the Snior League World Series, for 13 to 15-year-old boys in Gary, Ind., last week.

Nelson, Tolan on disabled list

CINCINNATI (AP) — Outfielder Bobby Tolan and pitcher Roger Nelson were placed on the disabled list Saturday by the Cincinnati Reds, who called up two minor league outfielders.

Nelson's elbow continues to bother him, the Reds said. He was placed on the list for 21 days. Nelson was 3-2 and had an earned run average of 3.86 in only 11 appearances this season.

The Reds said that Tolan is suffering from a bad back, and has not started since last week's series in New York against the Mets. Tolan will be out 15 days, the Reds said.

Outfielders Ken Griffey and Ed Armbrister were called up from Indianapolis of the American Association to replace the two injured players.

Griffey was hitting .327 with 10 home runs and 43 stolen bases at Indianapolis. Armbrister was hitting .308 with 10 homers and 72 runs datted in.

into first in the L&M with a four-underpar 67 and had a one-stroke advantage with his 54-hole total of 208, five under.

Bob Smith, another non-winning tour regular, was next in that event with a 69-209.

Former PGA champion Dave Stockton and Lanny Wadkins, winner of the USI Classic last week, followed at 210. Each had a 70. Wadkins led or shared the lead through most of the day, but dropped back when he found the water on the doubly dangerous 18th hole and made double bogey.

Trevino had a surprisingly easy time in handling Nicklaus, who had some putting problems. Lee, winner of two titles this season, played the front nine in five-under-par 31 and had Jack four-down at that point.

Then Nicklaus bogeyed the 12th, three-putting, to go five down. His birdie on the 13th just postponed the inevitable. Nicklaus, winner of five titles including the PGA this season, was never in the match played before the massive, milling mob that was loudly pro-Trevino.

Lee punched an eight-iron to within three feet for a birdie on the first hole and dropped a 25-footer on the fourth to go 2-up. Both birdied the fifth and Lee went to 3-up when Nicklaus three-putted the eighth.

Chiefs ready, remember past defeats from Pack

BY LEE REMMEL
KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Packers mark an "Anniversary" tonight — with the fond hope it will be as good as the original.

A year ago at this point, give or take a week or two, the Packers met the Kansas City Chiefs in their final exhibition of the 1972 season, following a lackluster, 31-10 loss to the St. Louis Cardinals.

Effecting a dramatic turnaround, they blanked the highly favored Chiefs in Milwaukee County Stadium, 20-0, a victory Dan Devine later pinpointed as the catalyst in the Packers' subsequent surge to the National Football Conference's Central Division title.

Devine would find a repeat in tonight's match entirely acceptable, of course. But the psychological setting for this one, to be viewed by more than 73,000 "live" witnesses in plush new Arrowhead Stadium and a national television audience is not that promising.

There is every reason to believe the Chiefs will be lying in wait. Not only have they never beaten the Packers, but that shutout they endured at Green Bay hands last September was the first they had suffered in nine years and only the third in their 14-year history.

Although it has been five years, the Chiefs also fell to the Packers in their only other meeting. That 1967 humbling (35-10) came in the first Super Bowl and the Chiefs haven't forgotten.

Lost last two years also have lost their last two pre-season ventures and both in the fourth quarter, which has not served to improve the disposition of KC Coach Hank Stran, a man who shares Dan Devine's unbounded zest for winning.

The unbeaten Packers, in contrast, will be in search of a third straight victory, having disposed of the Buffalo Bills (10-3) and the Houston Oilers (33-14) after settling for a 13-13 tie with the Bears in their opener.

Devine has termed tonight's contest "an important game. It's our last game before we cut down to 49 players and we will be meeting a good ball club — one which will give us a good chance to measure ourselves against a quality team."

While the Chiefs are expected to lead with their veteran and skilled incumbent, Len Dawson, the Packers will move into Phase Four of their quarter-back "contest." This time, Jerry Tagge will start and Scott Hunter will play the second half under the alternation program Devine has established.

Lefty Jim Del Gaiso, a recent addition to the QB field, has just begun to assimilate the Green Bay offense and will not become a factor in the competition until later — perhaps in next Saturday night's Bishop's Charity Game against the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Decision delayed
Prior to last week's trade for the former Miami Dolphin, Devine said he had hoped to decide on his No. 1 field general by early next week. That decision, apparently, will now have to be delayed until after Del Gaiso has had an opportunity to exhibit his talents.

Aside from Tagge, the only change in the starting lineup will find combative Cal Withrow opening at center in place of veteran Ken Bowman, who has been troubled by a knee injury incurred in the game against Houston.

Quarterback will not be the only position under close scrutiny tonight.

"We've got to look at some people," Devine said, "because we'll be cutting to 49 (from 58) Tuesday. We haven't settled on anybody. Everybody talks about quarterback, but every position is open."

Among rookies scheduled for further appraisal are center Larry McCarren, tackle Kent Branstetter, wide receivers Barry Smith and Reggie Echols, guard

Mike Dulac and running backs Les Goodman and Ron McBride on offense and linebackers Tom Toner and Larry Allen and halfbacks Hise Austin and Terry Hoepfner on defense.

Whoever is presiding under the center for the Packers tonight will be facing one of pro football's most fearsome pass rushes. Buck Buchanan, Curley Culp and Marvin Shaw, et al, sacked the Vikings' quarterback seven times in last week's 13-10 loss to Minnesota.

Dominant theme
Defense, in fact, could very well be the dominant theme. The Chiefs, with the NFL's premier linebacking trio (Bobby Bell, Willie Lanier and Jim Lynch) complementing that bristling front four, have allowed opponents an average of just 12 points per game.

The Packers have been even more miserly. They have given up only 10 points per appearance and their secondary, which last season led the league in this category, has yet to yield a touchdown pass along the exhibition trail.

Jim Hill and his outfield comrades, Willie Buchanan, Ken Ellis, Al Matthews, will have to exercise care, however. Dawson has a penchant for throwing the bomb and he has the talent at hand to run under it, chief among them split end Elmo Wright. Veteran Otis Taylor also is an invariable threat but he is listed as doubtful because of a pulled leg muscle.

Considering the rivals' respective track records, it is entirely possible the contest will evolve into a kicking duel between Kansas City's rangy Jan Stenerud, a noted long ball specialist, and the Packers' lead-footed sophomore, Chester Marcol.

Stenerud, a Norwegian-born import, has hit on six of seven field goal attempts to date, Marcol on seven of 13, including four of five in last week's victory over Houston.

UW offense looks sharp

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — The offense impressed Coach John Jardine when the University of Wisconsin football team went through its first full-scale scrimmage of the season Saturday.

Quarterback Gregg Bohlig, a junior from Eau Claire, connected on three of six passes for 96 yards and ran three times for nine yards. One of his aerials was a 66 yard scoring play to senior Chuck Richardson of Aurora, Ill.

Sophomore Duane Johnson of Grosse Pointe, Mich., gained 46 yards in seven carries, junior Tony Davis of Chicago 45 yards in seven attempts and sophomore Bill Marek of Chicago 38 yards in three jaunts.

"The best part of the scrimmage was the No. 1 offensive unit's lack of mistakes," Jardine said. "Except for one clipping penalty, there were no gross mistakes."

"The most disappointing thing came in the quarterback's after Bohlig. I was pleased with Bohlig. He optioned well, and handled the team well. But after him we have a long way to go in that department."

The Badgers will have the day off Sunday, and then cut down to one-a-day workouts Monday as classes get underway.

Blue, Oakland check Yankees

OAKLAND (AP) — Sal Bando's solo home run in the fifth inning backed Vida Blue's four-hit pitching and the Oakland A's blanked the New York Yankees 2-0 Saturday.

The victory was Oakland's 12th in its last 13 games, while the Yankees dropped their fifth in a row.

Blue, 15-7, gave up two hits in the first seven innings and two more in the eighth in winning for the sixth straight time.

It was Blue's fourth straight complete game.

The only New York hits were Mike Hegan's sun-aided triple in the fourth, a checked-swing single by Gene Michael in the fifth and singles by Michael and Matty Alou in the eighth.

Bando's home run, off loser Pat Dobson, 7-5, and was his 22nd of the baseball campaign.

The A's added a run in the eighth on Bert Campaneris' triple and Deron Johnson's sacrifice fly.

Donohue sets record

ELKHART LAKE, Wis. (AP) — Mark Donohue, the series leader, strengthened his position as the favorite for Sunday's Canadian-American Challenge Cup sports car race Saturday when he wiped out the qualifying record at Road America.

Donohue, driving Roger Penske's factory-backed turbocharged Porsche-Audi, became the first driver to turn the four-mile road course in less than two minutes.

He was timed in 1 minute 57.518 seconds, or 122.53 miles per hour, well over the 115.605 set last year by Denis Hulme of New Zealand in a McLaren-Chevrolet.

This is the fifth race in a series of eight, and Donohue, of Reading, Pa., has won the last two. His most recent triumph came two weeks ago at Lexington, Ohio.

South African Jody Scheckter, also in a turbo-Porsche, was second fastest at 119.206, followed by George Follmer at 118.908, and his teammate Charlie Kemp at 115.851.

Follmer, of Arcadia, Calif., and Kemp, of Atlanta, also drove turbo-Porsche vehicles, as did Hurley Haywood of Jacksonville, Fla., fifth-fastest at 113.990.

A change in the format of Sunday's race was announced Saturday.

Two 100-mile heats had been scheduled, both counting equally. Instead, the first 100-mile heat Sunday will be a qualifying run to determine starting position for the second.

Championship points and $50,000 of the $75,000 purse will be awarded according to the finish for the second heat.

Hanratty has fracture

LATROBE, Pa. (AP) — Reserve quarterback Terry Hanratty of the National Football League Pittsburgh Steelers has suffered a slight fracture of the small finger on his passing hand, the team announced Saturday.

Hanratty, who injured the finger during a practice session Thursday, is expected to be fully recovered in a week.

Coach Chuck Noll said he did not plan to use Hanratty Sunday against the New York Giants, but he said the Notre Dame graduate would be able to play if needed.

Foxes tip Bees, 6-5

BY GENE LILLGE
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

The Appleton Foxes managed to stay above water, but just barely, as they nearly floundered away a 5-0 lead in beating Burlington before 1,757 "Sink or Swim" Night fans Saturday night at Goodland Field, 6-5.

Appleton starter Ed Holly struggled through the initial four innings without giving up a hit. He worked out of a bases loaded jam in the first inning, and had a double play break up a Burlington threat in the fourth. He left in the fifth after being touched for three hits and a run.

Holly had plenty of offensive support at the start as the Foxes struck for one run in the first and four more in the third inning.

Mike Squires singled in the first Appleton tally after Nyls Nyman, named the Foxes Most Valuable Player, reached on an infield hit and stole second.

Nick Medrano's leadoff hit in the third, two errors on Burlington third baseman Chester Lemon, an RBI hit by Joe Pomylaka, two-run triple by newcomer Larry Walters, and a run-scoring triple by Manny Estrada accounted for Appleton's 5-0 lead after three frames. Appleton got its sixth run in the sixth inning on Medrano's RBI single to center.

After reaching Holly for a run in the fifth, the Bees struck for a solo run in the sixth, two in the seventh, and a final one in the ninth.

Mark Tanner, who entered the game in the seventh as the Foxes fourth pitcher picked up the win. Wayne McCauley pitched to one batter in the ninth, the last, and earned a save.

The Foxes move on to Wisconsin Rapids for a four-day set starting this afternoon, before returning to Goodland Field for the season's finale against the Twins on Thursday, August 30.

New UWM coach quits

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Rudy Davalos, named April 19 as head basketball coach at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, announced his resignation Saturday, effective Sept. 1.

Davalos, 34, said he will return to his home town of San Antonio to work as an assistant coach with the San Antonio Spurs of the American Basketball Association.

University Athletic Director Tom Rosandich said Tom Sager would act as interim head coach while the school seeks to fill the post.

Tigers edge White Sox

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim Northrup's two-run single keyed a three-run second inning that led the Detroit Tigers to a 4-2 decision over the Chicago White Sox in a nationally televised baseball game Saturday.

Chicago pitcher Stan Bahnsen, who came within one out of pitching a no-hitter in his last start Tuesday at Cleveland, suffered a costly wild spree in the second inning.

With one out Dick McAuliffe walked and Norm Cash followed with a single. Bahnsen 16-15, retired Duke Sims, but walked both Aurelio Rodriguez and Ed Brinkman to force in a run. Northrup then delivered his clutch single to give the Tigers a 3-0 lead.

The White Sox scored their first run off winner Jim Perry, 12-11, in the third inning on singles by Jorge Orta, Bucky Dent and Pat Kelly and a sacrifice fly by Bill Sharp.

In the fifth, Detroit scored when Chicago left fielder Jerry Hairston dropped Mickey Stanley's fly ball for a two-base error and Gates Brown followed with a run-scoring single.

A leadoff home run by Carlos May chased Perry in the ninth and Detroit relief ace John Hiller preserved the victory for the Tigers.

Perry scattered 10 hits and didn't issue a walk before leaving but benefited from some fine defensive work. Double plays got him out of trouble in the second and sixth innings. Dick Sharon made a fine, inning-ending catch on a fly to right by Dent when the White Sox had two men aboard in the seventh.

Bahnsen avoided additional trouble in the second inning when he got Stanley to ground out. He gave up harmless singles to McAuliffe in the third and Brinkman in the fourth.

After the Tigers had scored their unearned run in the fifth, Bahnsen retired the next two men before walking Norm Cash. Sims struck out to end the inning.

With two out in the sixth, Northrup went all the way to second on Bahnsen's throwing error. Stanley then hit a fly deep to right center only to have Sharp make a great, running catch.

The Tigers put runners on first and third with two out in the seventh on singles by Willie Horton and Cash but Eddie Fisher relieved Bahnsen and fanned Sims to end the threat.

Perry worked out of trouble in the eighth by retiring three men in a row after Pat Kelly led off with a double.

Chicago's Dick Allen done for this season

CHICAGO (AP) — "I'm glad they made the announcement because I was getting bugged constantly about when I'd be able to play again," said Dick Allen Saturday after the Chicago White Sox revealed the famed slugger was through for the season.

Dick Allen

"I'm not going anywhere, I'm going to stay right here and do whatever they want me to do and help in any way I can," said Allen. "We've got a lot of kids on the team and maybe I can help a few of them like (second baseman) Jorge Orta, who is going to be a good one."

Allen, the American League's Most Valuable Player and the highest paid player in baseball with an annual salary of $225,000, suffered a broken left leg in June.

With Allen out of the lineup and other injuries hitting the club, the Sox, who led the American League West by 4½ games early in June, are virtually out of the race. They are in fifth place, 16 games behind the Oakland A's.

Allen, who copped most valuable honors a year ago with 37 home runs, 113 runs batted in and a .308 average, suffered the injury in a first base collision with Mike Epstein of the California Angels June 28.

A few days later he was placed on the disabled list but tried to make a comeback July 31 in a game in which he collected three hits. However, except for a couple of appearances as a pinch batter, he has not played and most of the time he has not been with the club.

"I talked to him on the phone this morning," said Tanner. "I doubt seriously he can play again this season."

"What good would it be if we put him in the lineup just to say that Dick Allen is playing? He might favor the leg to the point of suffering other injuries."

Allen, who despite his lengthy absence, still leads the club in homers with 16, was not immediately available for comment. His current .316 average also is high for the club.

He played in 72 games which, according to his estimated $250,000 salary, amounts to $3,125 per game, or slightly less than $1,000 per time at bat. He had 250 at bats.

McKay's Trojans have potential

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Coach John McKay says his University of Southern California Trojans have unlimited potential as they prepare to defend their national collegiate football championship.

So, potentially speaking, how good will the 1973 Trojans be?

"I don't know," McKay said, and quipped, "Potential will get you beat—you can quote me on that."

The coach, who starts practice with 26 lettermen, including tailback Anthony Davis, linebacker Richard

Wood and quarterback Pat Haden, also said:

—Arkansas, the season-opening opponent Sept. 15 in the Coliseum, has gone to the run-oriented "I" and wishbone formations and will be much better than the team USC beat 31-10 last year in Little Rock.

—Freshmen will play, perhaps playing key roles in the Trojans' season, particularly if certain players don't come back from knee surgery.

Dale Mitchell, a starting linebacker last season, required knee surgery last spring and "I doubt he'll have enough time to rehabilitate."

If Mitchell can't play, letterman Ed Powell will move up to first string, McKay said.

Dave Boulware, who hurt a knee playing rugby, stands a better chance of recovering, McKay said, adding that freshman Shelton Diggs of San Bernardino, Calif., is next in line as the team's backup flanker behind Lynn Swann.

Mike McGirr, 6-foot-5, 285-pound offensive tackle is listed as the starter on the strong side, but McKay noted that the same was true last year when he failed to recover from knee surgery and sat out the season.

Fondy team defends MAA crown

Defending champion Boudry Electric of Fond du Lac will bid for its second title. Its string of championships in MAA slow pitch meets was ended by Braunie's of Whitelaw in the first tourney this summer.

Fox Cities entries include Surrey Lounge and Menasha Corp., Neenah, American Can, Bank of Menasha and John Strange Paper, Menasha; and Valley School Supply, The Pendulum, Pendulum II and Maritime Bar, Appleton.

Other teams are Bernward Hall, Fond du Lac; United Maintenance, Madison; Jabber's Bar, Oshkosh; Uncle Thirsty's, Manitowoc; Amvets, Oconto; and Ted's, Milwaukee.

Eight games are slated Saturday with the first starting at noon. The quarter-finals, semi-finals and finals will be played Sunday. The title game is carded at 5:15 p.m.

Brews will celebrate million attendance mark

Milwaukee Brewers, hoping to reach the one million mark in attendance for the first time in their brief history, are planning a huge celebration ceremony in honor of the one-millionth fan.

With the current home attendance of 958,462, the Brewers are optimistic of reaching the magic million mark during the next home stand which begins Thursday night, August 30, with the Boston Red Sox. The Sox will also be here for a Friday two-night doubleheader, and single day games on Saturday and Sunday. They will be followed by the Cleveland Indians for a Labor Day doubleheader on Monday and a Tuesday night game to conclude the home stay.

With the Brewers needing but 41,538 more fans to reach a million, and an average attendance this year of 16,245 fans per game, it is hoped that the Brewers will surpass a million on Friday night, August 31, or Saturday afternoon, September 1. Whichever day it is, however, the Brewers will have a huge celebration on the field immediately following the game with surprises galore. In addition, there will also be a memento given to each fan in attendance. This celebration will be the Brewers way of saying "thanks a million." By the way, the Brewers previous season attendance high of 933,690, set in 1970, was passed this year on Tuesday, August 14.

There will also be many other exciting events during the home stand highlighted by Latin American Day on Saturday. This day will feature pre game ceremonies honoring the Brewers four Latin players, Ellie Rodriguez, Pete Garcia, Ed Rodriguez, and Carlos Velazquez. The day will also be spiced with Latin American music performed live before and during the game. It will also be Senior Citizens and Kids Day with children 14 and under and senior citizens being admitted for $1.25 off each grandstand or box seat ticket.

Labor Day with the Indians will be Family Day with the head of the household paying full price for his ticket and the rest of his family being admitted for $1.25 off. Then on Tuesday, the Ladies will have their night as they will be admitted for $1.25 off.

It was during tackling drill, assistant coach Jim King said. "We were running scrimmage, working on blocking and tackling."

Congratulations, Rolf Deming! Deming, Butte des Morts' head professional, carded a 36-hole total of one-under par 143 to win the Northeastern Wisconsin Golf Association Open Tournament last week.

Rolf Deming

Deming beat Fond du Lac South Hills pro Bill Giese by two shots. Rolf's assistant at BDM, Steve Howe, tied for third in the meet.

Deming, a four-year tour veteran, was the class of that class tournament. There's no doubt this win will not be Rolf's last.

Speaking of class, congratulations Dick Spangenberg.

Dick Spangenberg

Spangy was named NEWGA's Man-of-the-Year at last Sunday's Open banquet. The Butte des Morts gentleman truly deserved the award for the outstanding contributions he has made to the Northeastern.

Spangenberg joins a proud and elite group of Men with this award. Well done.

The final matches in the Webb Collar tournament are being held today at Hortonville's Grand View Golf Course. If you have the chance, ride on over and enjoy some fine golf action.

Don't forget to enter the 7th Annual Reid Pro-Amateur tournament set for September 10.

Entries are due on Wednesday, September 5. A $20 entry fee includes prizes and a T-bone steak dinner at the Columbus Club.

Reid pro Ralph Mouser is again lining up a fine contingent of pros and amateurs so don't miss the fun.

Don Andringa aced the 192-yard, second hole at Reid during the past week. He used a five wood.

Test drive a different drive system.

Youngster Ralph Deford registered an eagle-two on the third hole when his nine-iron second shot disappeared in the hole.

Pro Ralph Mouser toured his links in two-under 69.

Winnagamie will host a couples' 18-hole 2-ball handicap event on Saturday, September 29. A $10 entry fee includes green fees and prizes. Entry blanks are available throughout the area. For more information contact Mary Beth at the Winnagamie course.

Flight winners in the Winnagamie Ladies league last week were Mrs. John Losselyong, Mrs. Dennis Grundman, Marge Monte, Mrs. Ralph Hayden, and Mrs. Robert Smith.

the annual meeting of the Wisconsin Public Links Association was held at Mystery Hills last week. Clair Bolwerk and Leroy Christopherson were elected as State Representatives from Reid Municipal.

Jerry Spaay carded an even par 36 on Reid's back nine to pace the Good-Fellowship League.

Clair Bolwerk added a 37, while Jim Tierney, Al Koller, Syl Bayer and Travis Roberts each had 38s.

Chuck Bayer's one-under par 72 and Tom Hanby's even-par 73 paced golf action at the Fox Valley Golf Club last week.

Other fine scores were reported by Jim Haas 74, Bill Heerman and Reho Riopelle 76, John Haynes 77, Jim Lehman, Dr. Lehman, and Don Peters 78, and Corn Mayer with 79.

Bonnie and Pat Jerow led the ladies with 91s. Other scores included Betty Manders and Leta Masaros 92, Judy Schomisch 93, Carol Wildenberg 94, Ella Reimer 95, Joan Grunwaldt and Marjorie Koglin 97, Kay Dusseault, Irene Peters and Carol Minkeberg and 98, and Kate Boots, Ester Boyer and Ester Boyer with 99s.

Chuck Bayer, the 1973 Fox Cities Amateur winner, defeated 1970 Amateur king Tom Hanby, 3-2, to win the Fox Valley match play championship.

The Fox Valley club and class medal tourney will be held over the Labor Day weekend.

Mrs. Roman Van Thiel and Mrs. Richard Ristau were flight winners in the Oakwood Hills Ladies Golf League this past week.

Jean Harke and Betty Mischler teamed to win the Countryside Ladies league.

Bonnie VanderVelden and Audrey Rooyakkers were second, with Claire Woelfinger and Eunice Reider third.

Mrs. Don Streck had 45, and Mrs. William Bartman a 49 in the Flower League at Reid.

Dee Dee Ebben had a low score of 48 in the "Tw-Ettes league jamboree."

Slow play was no problem on a golf course in Prince George, B.C. the other day.

A group of 83 Canadian golfers moved a golf ball around an 18-hole course in 12 minutes, 14.5 seconds. That performance, they claimed, bests the record of 12:25 set by 45 golfers on an 18-hole course at Scarsdale, N.Y.

This edition of "Teering Off" is the final one for the summer. Although there are, hopefully, many weeks remaining on the golfing calendar, this reporter must pack his bags and return to Madison for one final semester of school.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank area professionals Ralph Mouser of Reid, Rolf Deming at Butte des Morts, Don Erdman of Fox Valley, Mary Beth Nienhaus at Winnagamie, Riverview's Jim Morrison, George Nacker at North Shore, and Tom Knorr of Ridgeway. These people and their staffs have been a great help throughout the summer. Thank you.

Most of all, however, I thank you, the golfing public, who's interest and enthusiasm for the game of golf make this column possible. See you next year.

Sports can help woman be more beautiful

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent
MOSCOW (AP)—Rigorous sports can make a woman a more beautiful and stimulating creature, one of the United States' best known distance runners said, adding:

"We American women could take a few lessons from the Russians and quit worrying about unsightly muscles."

New Yorker Katherine Switzer, a former distance runner visiting Moscow during the World University Games, worked out daily in Red Square. (AP Wirephoto)

Kathy Switzer of New York, the first woman to compete in the Boston Marathon in 1967, was one of the witnesses to the rout of U.S. women by their Soviet counterparts in track and field, basketball and other sports of the World University Games—swimming an exception.

"There is no reason that American women should be inferior to Russian women in anything, even in sports," Kathy said.

"It's simply that by tradition our country has a bad attitude about sports as far as women are concerned. When a boy is three years old, his father gives him a bat and a ball and starts teaching him to run and throw.

"But if a girl picks up a ball or bat, the parents are horrified. 'You can't do that,' they say. 'It will make you masculine and ugly. You should play with dolls.'"

Reid committed to football, music

WILMINGTON, Ohio (AP)—Being described as a Beethoven in football gear strikes a dull note with Mike Reid.

Mike Reid

"It's irritating," growls the usually placid Cincinnati Bengals' defensive star whom opposing quarterbacks contend is strong enough to pack his own piano to the many concerts in which he performs.

The time has come to set the record straight, says Reid.

"Music is not a hobby with me. It's a damn important part of my life. 'I've been labeled as the serious, classical type. The writers like to give the impression that I walk on stage in long tails and white ties. A lot has been written about it and a lot of it isn't true. It makes good copy,'" says the former All-American from Penn State.

"I've yet to meet a writer who will make an effort to understand what music means to me. Music is the ultimate to me. It's a natural feeling of release," says Reid, who often finishes a demanding day with a soothing hour-long setting at the campus chapel organ at Wilmington College.

"Musical involvement is a personal thing. It's my greatest satisfaction," says Reid, an All-Pro defensive tackle in the National Football League last year in only his third season.

The 25-year-old Pennsylvanian says he plans a heavy schedule of concerts in the off-season next year.

"I plan to do it solely. I'm in the process of formulating a band and a lot of the music will be my own," he says. "It will be mostly pop."

His romance with music runs the gamut. He plays the piano, sings and writes.

"I have a desire to write songs with lyrics. That's the direction I'm heading now," says Reid, who produced a record entitled "A Song for Peace" two years ago that is played frequently in the Cincinnati area.

"I like to record, but the important thing is writing. To express a feeling into a piece of music is a deep experience," he says.

In the meantime, the handsome 6-foot-4, 255-pound Reid finds a philosophical fun in the violent world of football.

"here's something about the exhilaration of a Sunday afternoon. To know the joys and agonies. It's a total commitment."

"But I'm committed to both," he says.

Wisconsinite trapshoot champ

VANDALIA, Ohio (AP)—There was a great similarity to the two young men who shot off for the Grand American Handicap championship Friday at the 74th annual Grand American Trapshooting tournament.

For their day's shooting, only one target separated them. But, it made Dennis Taylor, 23, of Muscoda, Wis., the grand champion and Kim Altvater, 22, Haven, Kan., the runnerup.

Each posted scores of 99 in the regular race with Taylor shooting from 22½ yards and Altvater from 21 yards.

Both are university students, Taylor at Wisconsin State in Plattsburg and Altvater at Kansas State. Taylor studies math, Altvater hopes to be a teacher, probably in physical education.

Both have been working construction jobs during the summer. Both were visiting the Grand American tournament for the first time.

Taylor, the new champion who may realize as much as $5,000 for his winning effort, arrived late for the original squad in which he was to shoot. He was visiting a nearby air force museum.

He was resquaded as one of the last in the field of 3,421 to shoot at the 100 targets.

"I knew I had a 99 to beat," he said. "I made up my mind to get them."

He never before shot them all. His best previous handicap score was 96 in Wisconsin two years ago. But he came close Friday, dropping only his 58th target and deadlocking Altvater who shot his 99 before noon.

Altvater's score was a heartbreaker. He had 99 straight. Then faced with a left, low-angle target, he missed. "If I hadn't missed that last target, we wouldn't be here," Altvater said just before taking the shootoff line.

In the shootoff, Taylor dropped one of 25 and Altvater two. The Kansas boy did some consolation as his score, too, should be good for close to $5,000.

Other champions crowned in the Handicap were: Jo Ann Nelson, Lone Tree Iowa, women's title with a 96 from 19½ yards; Joseph Loitz, Peotone, Ill., junior title with 96 from 21 yards; Charles Forthofer, Avon, Ohio, 97 from 24 yards for the sub-junior; C. N. Pierce, Ottumwa, Iowa, veterans' title with 96 from 22½ yards.

STOP SPINNING YOUR WHEELS

. . . think of Alpha-One first!

If you're like many families you've been spending a lot of time calling about advertisements in the paper and then driving around looking for, and looking at homes. We would like to save you a lot of time and a lot of wear and tear on the family automobile. We have a complete catalog of most available homes in the entire Neenah-Menasha area. Besides having pictures of these homes, our information sheets contain all the facts and figures you've been calling to get. Because of our knowledge of these homes, we can often furnish you with additional information which will help to narrow or expand the selection available to you. When we find the homes you like, we'll make the appointments and we'll even furnish the transportation. And, in case you don't know it, all this service is free. It costs no more to do it our way and no less to do it the way you have been.

Hockey tryout thrills writer

EDITOR'S NOTE: The New York Golden Blades of the World Hockey Association held a public tryout, perhaps the first in major league hockey history, this past week. Since anyone could try out, Associated Press sports writer Frank Brown, who plays amateur hockey, appeared with his equipment. Here's his account of what happened:

By FRANK BROWN

NEW YORK (AP) — The deafening quiet in the Sky Rink dressing room was broken intermittently by half-joking, half-serious comments.

"I'll settle for a $25,000 bonus" or "I won't sign unless I get a no-cut contract."

But no one was laughing. Young hopefuls were strapping on their equipment. Their faces expressed their tenseness and it wasn't hard to sense the pressure they felt.

To be honest, I felt it, too. For the first time, I was going to play hockey that meant more than a simple win or a loss. I was joining 120 others at the New York Golden Blades World Hockey Association tryout.

Before long, I was immersed in my own thoughts: thoughts which always run through a goaltender's mind before a game.

"You've got to be good today," I told myself. "Got to challenge those shooters. No mistakes...you can do it." I wasn't the only one trying to impress Coach Camille Henry and Bill McDermott, the player personnel director in a scrimmage.

Soon it was my turn. Calmly, confidently, I skated towards the goal, knowing my chance had come.

Formed attack

Henry dropped the puck at center ice and the other team gained possession. In a flash they had formed an attack on my goal.

A shot. The black blur sped towards the lower right-hand corner of my net—only to be stopped by a combination of my right arm and leg as I sank to my knees for the save.

It's always a relief to make that first save. It's always easier afterwards.

A moment later, I made another save.

After the second save, I decided the Blades would be fools not to sign me, and began thinking about the contract negotiations.

While I was dreaming, the other team got the puck again.

A guy with a red sweatshirt—who for some reason I thought was on my team—grabbed the puck and shot from the face-off circle to my left. Surprised at being shot at by a teammate, my reactions were too slow. The puck went in.

I made another good save on a slap shot from close range, but the rebound beat me. Well, I thought, two goals isn't that bad, right?

The scrimmage ended and everyone crowded around Henry and McDermott as they read off the numbers of the 25 best players.

My number wasn't called. "...And for those of you not chosen, thanks for coming."

I wasn't too upset with not having been good enough...After all, the pros have to live with pressure. My ordeal was over.

Johnny Kerr rejoins Bulls as business boss

CHICAGO (AP) — Johnny Kerr, a basketball star at the University of Illinois in the 1960s and the first coach of the Chicago Bulls, has been named business manager of the Bulls.

The National Basketball Association team announced Thursday that Kerr is rejoining the Bulls.

He was named NBA coach of the year when, in 1966, he brought the fledgling Bulls into the league's playoffs. Kerr departed soon thereafter, however, after feuding with the Bulls' management.

NHL won't merge with WHA

TORONTO (AP) — The National Hockey League will not merge with the World Hockey Association and will battle with the new league to sign top junior players.

The NHL board of governors decided at a closed meeting Thursday they will not stand by and watch the WHA sign under-age juniors; they will change their policy if necessary.

In a statement following the meeting, the NHL said:

"Our great interest is to preserve the structure of amateur hockey and to sign players only of eligible age."

"But if the only alternative is a plan whereby our teams are given authority

Froehlich urges repeal of license fee increases

Congressman Harold V. Froehlich has urged Gov. Patrick Lucey to work for repeal of the recently enacted increases in non-resident hunting and fishing license fees when the state legislature re-convenes for its October session.

Froehlich said the increased fees will gravely damage the tourist industry in many parts of the state, particularly in northern Wisconsin which is largely dependent upon tourism for its economic livelihood.

Until recently, a non-resident fishing license was $6.50. This has now been increased to $12.50. A non-resident small game license fee was $25.50 and now has been increased to $50.50. A non-resident license to hunt deer was $35.50 and this now has been hiked to $70.50.

"Increases of this size," Froehlich declared, "have no logical or economical basis. They cannot fail to discourage and deter out-of-state tourists from coming into Wisconsin."

The eighth district lawmaker said that unless the fee structure is repealed the Wisconsin tourist industry will no longer be competitive with those in other states.

Froehlich offered the following statistics in comparison: Wisconsin's non-resident fishing license is now $12.50. Michigan's license is $6.25, plus $3.50 if a trout stamp is desired, but a non-resident can purchase a 7-day license for $5.25 or a 3-day license for only $2.25.

Minnesota has a $6.50 non-resident fishing license ($10 for a husband and wife), but a 3-day license can be purchased for $3. North Dakota has a $6 fee for the season. Colorado has a $10 fee with a special 10-day permit available for $5.

For a small game license, Wisconsin's fee is now $50.50 compared to $25 in Michigan, $27 in Minnesota, $35 in North Dakota, $10 in Wyoming, $25 in Montana and $15 in Colorado.

While Wisconsin's deer license for non-residents will be $70.50, the price of such a license in other states includes: Michigan $40, Minnesota $50.25, North Dakota $50, Wyoming $50, New York $36 and Colorado $50.

"As a congressman, I ordinarily refrain from embroiling myself in state governmental matters," Froehlich emphasized, "but I cannot remain silent to this state law which threatens the economic well being of many people in my district."

Giles heads class field

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Even without Ben Crenshaw, the 73rd U.S. Amateur Golf Championship, reverting back to match play this week, packs plenty of class shotmakers.

A field of 200, including the American, British and Canadian Amateur titleholders, gathers at Inverness Club for practice rounds Sunday and Monday over the old, rolling, 6,800-yard course.

For Inverness, now 70 years old, it's a return to the national golf spotlight. The par 35-3671 layout was the site of the 1920, 1931 and 1957 National Opens.

Marvin "Vinny" Giles III has a shot at becoming the first golfer in history to win the U.S. Amateur at medal play one year and at match play the next season.

"Nobody may have the chance again. It sure would be nice to do it," drawled the 29-year-old veteran from Richmond, Va. Giles won with a 285 total for 72 holes last year.

Crenshaw, the three-time NCAA champion who finished in a tie for second last year in this event, has forsaken the amateur ranks for a shot at the pro tour.

The others who have pulled the fabled Bobby Jones in 1930, Lawson Little in 1934 and 1935, Harold Hilton in 1911 and Bob Dickson in 1967.

And then there's George Burns of Manhasset, N.Y., who won the Canadian Amateur earlier this summer.

Burns was one of the qualifiers from the original cast of 2,176. He needed a seven-under-par 65 in the second round for a 144 in a sectional qualifier.

All of the U.S. and British Walker Cup members have automatic spots in the event that opens with the first round Tuesday and extends through the nationally televised (ABC) 36-hole finals Sunday.

Bug stings can pose danger

Home gardens are being "bugged" this summer as never before.

From tiny "no-see-ums" to bumblebees, it is open season on the tillers of the home soil. Gardeners are being beset from all sides by insects that have developed a mighty resistance to "miracle" poisons developed for their extinction.

For most people, being bitten, stung or harassed by flying creatures while weeding, pruning, mowing, watering or planting is but a minor annoyance, but for some a sting can mean extreme discomfort, illness or even sudden death.

Researchers report that of all the deaths in the United States during the 1960's known to have resulted from bites and stings of venomous creatures, more than 60 per cent were caused by insects. Nearly half of these were the work of the flying species.

The Health Insurance Institute says honeybees, wasps, hornets, yellow jackets and fire ants will kill more people this year than will snakes and spiders. These insects cause two out of every five deaths resulting from venomous bites in this country.

A study of 2,606 sting cases by the American Academy of Allergy shows that 50 per cent of those who suffered severe reactions had no previous inkling that they were allergic to insect venom. Medical authorities acknowledge that no one knows the exact toll in lives because sudden death in the garden may be attributed to heart attack without further medical investigation.

The first danger sign that a sting may cause an allergic reaction may be shortness of breath, palpitations of the heart, painful movement or rapid swelling and inflammation of the affected area. A person with any unusual or fast reaction should summon help or rush to a doctor or a hospital for emergency treatment. If he is aware of his allergy, he should ask his doctor for medication to carry with him in the out-of-doors.

What should you do after an onslaught from the insect world?

In the case of attack by a bee or wasp look immediately for the stinger that may have been left imbedded in the skin. Although the insect may have flitted off, the stinger that remains is still pumping venom into the system.

Do not try to pull out the stinger of a bee, wasp, hornet, yellow jacket or ant because it is really a sac containing venom, and the more pressure you put on it, the more venom goes into your body. Ease it out with cellophane tape or scrape it out with your fingernail, a needle or some other sharp instrument and then wash the spot thoroughly to avoid possible infection. Apply ice or a cold compress if possible.

A biting insect such as a mosquito or tick will leave no venom, but its saliva will enter the tissues while it is ingesting your blood. If a tick has a firm grip on your arm or leg, apply a drop of mineral oil, gasoline or kerosene to it, and it will relax. Then remove it with tweezers and wash the area thoroughly.

Don't try to pull a tick out with your fingers. If you do, you are likely to leave its jaw imbedded in your skin as a potential source of infection.

Bites of flies and mosquitoes should be cleaned thoroughly and daubed with calamine lotion or a mixture of baking soda and cold cream to relieve pain and itching.

The Health Insurance Institute reports that a solution of one-quarter teaspoon of meat tenderizer and one tablespoon of water rubbed into an insect bite often brings relief.

Also recommended by a wider variety of experts are sunburn relief products and other drugstore items containing mild local anesthetics.

Combined safety experts admonish that the best cure is the proverbial ounce of prevention. Here are some of the things recommended to prevent or minimize the annoyances of garden pests:

1. Don't go barefoot outdoors. The feet and lower legs are prime targets of insects that lurk in grass.

2. Don't wear hair spray, perfume or bring colors in the garden from eating sweet fruit, such as watermelon, or ice cream and candy outdoors because insects savor them almost as much as you do.

3. When insects start buzzing around you, don't flail your arms and swat at them. Try to remain calm and you will be less likely to attract their attention. If you see a bee coming in for the "kill," however, cover your eyes to protect them from being stung.

4. Don't try to combine sunbathing and gardening, particularly while mowing. Gardeners mowing lawns are among the more popular targets of insects. Therefore, try to expose as little skin as possible; wear long sleeves, a hat, gardening gloves and shoes.

Tons of fish from Winnebago

PIPE — Fish by the boatload come into Calumet Harbor here.

About four days a week from July to November, two trawlers operated by the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) fisheries unload their catch of silvery sheepshead and plump carp.

According to Lloyd McLeod, manager of the rough fish removal station, the only one of its kind on Lake Winnebago, about 900,000 pounds of fish have been removed so far this year. About 90 per cent of the take is sheepshead.

BY HAZEL THIEL

Post-Crescent correspondent

Average catch is about 10,000 pounds with "good days" bringing in near 30,000 pounds.

Consumers range from mink to man, as area mink ranchers have their trucks loaded with fish and a few shovelfuls of ice. Peddlers, mostly from Milwaukee buy the sheepshead for their city customers. They are, however, selective about the size of the fish they want, hand picking fish weighing only about one pound.

One peddler who buys about 600 pounds a week explained that "it's a pretty good eating fish but the smaller ones are sweeter."

He said he made the trip from Milwaukee to Pipe about twice a week. His customers fried or baked the fish with a few making chowder.

McLeod says he has a lot of fish peddlers who buy the fish for 5 cents a pound. Mink ranchers, who buy in larger quantities and take all size fish pay 3 cents a pound.

It's the genial McLeod's job to see that the day's catch is sold. "There never can be anything left," he grins. Keeping in radio contact with the trawlers, he learns about how many pounds are expected and sets about calling the mink ranchers on his list.

Buyers also come from Sheboygan and Winnebago.

John Goyke, Fond du Lac Road, Oshkosh, buys about 60,000 pounds of carp a year which he smokes and sells for a living. His customers are mainly from Milwaukee and Chicago, although he does have local customers, too. They buy the smoked fish in an average of five-pound lots.

Trawling on the lake begins in July. From ice-out to that time, 22 large fish traps are set. These are packed in 100 pound boxes, iced top and bottom and shipped to Chicago. These go for 8 cents a pound.

No game fish are taken from the lake. Those caught are recorded and returned to the water. Six men are working at the Pipe station, where McLeod has been in charge for 15 years. He has 36 years with the department.

About 1,300,000 pounds of rough fish was removed from Lake Winnebago last year.

When Nov. 1 rolls around, the crew will move to Lake Puckaway to remove carp.

Until then, every day, except weekends, when weather permits, when the hands on the clock reach 3 p.m., the trawlers are due. Visitors to Columbia Park rush to greet the fishermen along with the fish peddlers, mink ranchers and those few yarn spinners who want to take a few fish back to the city — the lowly sheepshead makes a good tale, to the unsuspecting.

Smithsonian given campaign memorabilia

By DONALD SANDERS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Smithsonian Institution has just acquired more than 300 significant mementoes of American presidential campaigns and inaugural memorabilia, including two buttons worn for the first inaugural in 1789.

The items were collected by Thomas H. Williams, an attorney and Democratic campaign organizer, who on his death in 1972 bequeathed them to former Gov. Michael V. DiSalle of Ohio. DiSalle in turn has given them to the Smithsonian's Museum of History and Technology, in memory of Williams.

This is the second largest single collection of political memorabilia at the Smithsonian. Local attorney Ralph E. Becker gave his collection of many thousand items in 1968.

The DiSalle gift includes such unusual or rare items as:

—Two metal clothing buttons worn for George Washington's inaugural in 1789 — one reading "GW — Long Live the President," the other pressed with a symbolic American eagle.

—Two banners made in 1844 for the presidential race of Speaker of the House Henry Clay, the Whig candidate who was narrowly defeated by darkhorse Democrat James Polk.

—A three-paned lantern carried in 1864 torchlight rallies for President Abraham Lincoln and his running mate, Andrew Johnson. There are also two simple "wide awake" torches carried in 1860.

—A bold velvet banner, festooned with stitchery and tassels, used in Grover Cleveland's successful 1884 bid for the presidency. A formal portrait of Cleveland, in stiff collar, is painted on the silk at center.

—From the 1896 campaign, a William McKinley doll dressed in a flannel business suit and wearing a serious expression.

—A large oil portrait of Alfred Landon, which hung in the convention hall where he was nominated in 1936.

There is also a tremendous array of popular memorabilia — buttons, badges, posters, handbills, broadsides, campaign banners, commemorative plates, rally noise-makers, lithograph portraits, political cartoons and song sheets.

Collector Williams, born in 1934, also found mementoes of national issues. The collection includes a broadside announcing speeches Carry Nation would give on the subject of temperance.

The museum plans to incorporate the collection into a major reinstallation of its political history wing, in an exhibition to be called "of the People, by the People, for the People," to be completed by early summer of 1974.

In the meantime, items from the collection will be used on a limited basis in temporary and special exhibitions.

BIG HAUL

Silvery sheepshead and plump carp, 10,000 to 30,000 pounds of them on a typical summer day, come from Lake Winnebago, from trawlers operated by the Department of Natural Resources. Most of the catch goes to mink ranchers but a small percentage of the annual catch of about 900,000 pounds does wind up on the dinner tables of state residents.

Commission seeks safety advisers

If you are interested in product safety and belong to a consumer or community organization, you are invited to volunteer your services as an adviser to the federal government.

The invitation also has been extended to public employees and to representatives of consumer product industries including small businesses.

When Congress created the Consumer Product Safety Commission, with the principal task of protecting the public against unreasonable risks of injury from some 10,000 consumer products, it also provided for a 15-member advisory council to assist the commission.

The commission would like all interested persons to send in applications for membership on the Product Safety Advisory Council, so that it will know of the best possible candidates.

The commission in effect is trying to place a nationwide public advertisement for citizen volunteers.

The format the commission asks applicants to follow includes name, address, birthdate, present employment, extracurricular activities related to product safety, discussion of how you learned of the council, interests, representation, experience and expertise.

Applications should be submitted by September 17 to the Secretary, Consumer Product Safety Commission, Washington, D.C. 20207.

Fee-free camping could hurt

When you can save a couple of hard-earned bucks in these tight times, your smile becomes a bit more cheery. Right? Well, undoubtedly some smiled. But a lot of campers in the Nicolet National Forest were both surprised and dis-

BY PETER GENIESSE

Post-Crescent staff writer

mayed during the days of August to find themselves freeloaders.

And the forest officialdom wasn't too happy about it.

The campers had expected to pay a reasonable $2 daily fee to pitch their tents or park their trailers and use the abundant, though rustic facilities of the 23-acre campgrounds scattered through the six-county forest area.

But a vague congressional rider and a presidential stroke of the pen on Aug. 1 eliminated all fees charged throughout the National Forest system. Only the highly developed campgrounds, about 30 of the 2,221 in the United States, and none in Wisconsin can now charge the using public.

The net national result is a $5 million loss in revenues.

For Nicolet, which collected $57,000 during the past fiscal year in campers' fees, it could mean severe cuts in maintenance and development of new and existing facilities.

For the six northern counties which share the forest and a quarter of the fees collected, it means a loss of nearly $15,000 in extra tax funds.

For the camper, who now has trouble finding an unoccupied site on a weekend, it could mean even fewer openings, more unkempt facilities and "less desirable" neighbors.

And for the private campsite operator, even though he provides classier accommodations, it means unfair competition. The "rider" to the flood control act, pushed by a congressman from Missouri and aimed at opening up Army Corps of Engineers' recreational properties in that state, passed Congress last month. The result is that the government is prohibited from charging the public to use basic recreational facilities.

Campers now get a free ride at the 550 sites Nicolet provides along a one-million acre peninsula stretching from Mountain to Land O'Lakes.

The same is true with the hundreds of campsites in the Chequamegon National Forest in the northwest corner of the state and the Ottawa National Forest which adjoins the Nicolet in Michigan's upper peninsula.

Congress and the President's signature took away much of the revenue that the National Forest Service used for upkeep and expansion of its camping and boating facilities. And there's no legislation pending to ease the bite of that $5 million loss nationally.

The action was as swift as it was stunning.

While President Nixon signed the bill on Aug. 1, the word didn't get out of Washington for several days. It wasn't until late afternoon on Aug. 6 that Nicolet Forest Supervisor Thomas Fulk got the order from his national bosses.

"I was shocked," Fulk said. "I didn't know it was coming."

He added that the caller said it was a law and should be implemented.

Before Fulk could pass on the word to his men in the field, some already had the day's receipts in hand and had to make the rounds of the campsites refunding the fees.

However, Fulk pointed out, those who paid for camping between Aug. 1 and when the word got out won't be getting their money back since the bill allowed "a reasonable time for implementation."

Fulk said the dropping of the fees won't have any effect on the rest of the forest's regulations, including the 14-day camping limit. He added that supervisors would still make daily rounds of all the sites.

But he wondered whether the "no-pay" psychology might not have a detrimental effect on the rest of the rules.

He also feared overcrowding at certain areas when the public becomes aware of the fee-free camping.

The Nicolet Forest offers only minimal facilities and is designed for campers who like to rough it. That means a slip, table, fireplace and nearby outhouse, water pump and woodpile. A few spots like Franklin Lake near Eagle River, have indoor plumbing and water spigots. Before the fees were lifted, campers there paid $3 instead of $2 for those extra conveniences.

Most private campgrounds are a bit more refined, offering at least electrical hookups. Many also provide showers, pools, shops, playground equipment and even organized recreational activities.

When the forest charged, the nearby private operators, even with their higher fees, weren't hurting for customers. The camping craze, which still hasn't leveled off, will likely continue to fill nearly all the sites available.

But at least some convenience-minded campers will be persuaded to rough it free-of-charge, in the forest.

And the taxpayer, rather than the camper, will pick up the tab for those vacations in the woods.

As Fulk remarked, "If the user doesn't, then the non-user will have to pay the freight."

Remember when...

City Park, Appleton's oldest, had a fountain in its center? Also note the bandstand nearby, which brings back the fun of summer band concerts for many oldtimers. Now the fountain and its pool that delighted all youngsters is gone, along with the bandstand. So are many of the trees, victims of winter storms and disease.

200 couples at Golden Wedding Club dinner

By BOB WALTON

How do you get more than 200 couples who have been married at least 50 years together for a picnic?

If there's a secret to it the Jackson, Michigan "Citizen Patriot" has the answer. The newspaper recently put on its annual picnic for the Golden Wedding Club it founded and sponsors.

This was the 29th annual affair although it's really not a picnic any more as the "Citizen Patriot," as it is known in Jackson, now serves a delicious catered dinner. All the old folks have to do is to be there, and that seems to be no problem—all records were broken this year when 441 persons turned out.

Two hours before the meal was served in a high school cafeteria the room was all but filled and it wasn't long before extra tables and chairs were being moved in.

Herbert W. Spendlove, Editor, welcomed the members after which Thomas A. Riordan, Managing Editor, took over as Master of Ceremonies. There was dinner music by an accordionist, group singing, a barbershop quartet, a trio of beauty queens, and even a bit of dancing in which me of the more agile senior citizens participated.

All in all it was a fun day and that included the more or less light remarks by this writer who served as speaker. Back in 1944 when it all started it was a picnic in the real sense of the word with participants bringing salads, desserts, and covered dishes.

While most picnics feature sack and three-legged races and other "athletic" events, the Golden Wedding Club guests are offered prizes for "achievements" which are always a dark secret until Riordan announces them.

For instance, a prize was offered to any woman who just might have a $100 bill in her purse. One woman did. Another woman won a prize for the $2 bill she produced, while a man was honored for having one of the old large $1 bills.

One of the other prizes was won by a woman—and the only one—wearing a hat; a couple who brought a newspaper clipping of their wedding portrait; a doubly sure man who wore both belt and suspenders; a woman who produced an uncashed Social Security check—it had to be an old one—a woman with a shoe horn and a man with a carpenter's pencil; a woman who carried in her purse a diaper pin to the utter amazement of everyone, and a couple who brought their "Citizen Patriot" Golden Wedding Certificate.

Just how long Riordan will be able to come up with his unusual "contests" is anyone's guess, but it has gotten to the point that just about everyone has something odd in his pocket.

The event has become so popular they now come from every town and village in the area and no less than six couples gave Florida addresses when they registered.

Riordan is already planning next year's "picnic." He has to start early to come up with all those prizes!

A time to live

Health insurance is one of the easiest things to buy today, but be sure you understand what you are buying.

Although Medicare is a must for retired persons it has its limitations, which is why most people need some form of supplementary insurance.

Buying health insurance is like buying anything else—you get what you pay for. If the premium is unbelievably small so, usually, will be the benefits.

In reading a brochure, skip the claims of payments from $500 to $1,000 a month with total benefits going up to as much as $50,000. Get right down to the nitty gritty on the pages with the fine print. If it's so fine you need a magnifying glass to read it use one, as that's where you'll find the exclusions and other pertinent information.

One thing to remember is that the average hospital stay of a retiree is 13 days unless the person is an accident victim. Also, anyone hospitalized for more than 60 days for illness or surgery could be a terminal case.

So, when total benefits of from $25,000 to $50,000 are mentioned it means hospitalization for at least two years and the odds you will ever collect are astronomically small. What you need to know is what a policy will do for you every day you are in a hospital.

This writer has yet to see a health policy that even approaches the benefits Medicare offers. Even with the recent increase to $6.30 a month it's still the cheapest—and best—insurance on the market. No one can afford to pass it up when he becomes 65.

But, while Medicare pays 80 per cent of most charges, and often 100 per cent, there are items it does not cover. That is the reason extra insurance is needed if one is to avoid dipping into savings.

Items excluded by Medicare include the extra cost of a private room (unless medically necessary), private duty nurses, the first three pints of blood in each benefit period, personal conveniences such as television and radio when not included in the room, and the deduction of $72 for each time one is a hospital patient.

Doctors' fees come under the medical section of Medicare and 80 per cent of all "reasonable" costs are allowed above the annual deduction of $60 the patient must accept. A patient is not reimbursed for any part of prescription and patent medicine costs.

Anyone buying health insurance with the expectation of turning an illness into a profit is due to be disappointed. With hospital costs escalating to $100 a day in many areas one is in luck if he can so much as break even.

When looking over a brochure skip the inevitable testimonials. You don't know the people anyway and have no way of checking. What you should read carefully are the exclusions, waiting periods and limitations on payment for pre-existing conditions.

Following are thumbnail sketches from some of the many brochures on my desk. Almost all rates quoted are for ages 65 to 74 and, unless specified, all cover hospitalization only.

Company No. 1—Pays $33.33 a day after the FIFTH day. Premium, $13.35 a month. Alternative policy pays $20 a day on same terms for premium of $8.75 a month. Neither pays anything for two years for pre-existing conditions.

No. 2—Limited to treatment of cancer only and not available to anyone who has ever had cancer. Pays $50 a day first 90 days and $100 thereafter with maximum benefit of $50,000. Premium, $12 a year. Surgery and medical services not covered. Benefits start 30 days from date of policy.

No. 3—Pays $20 a day from FIRST day. Premium, $8.98 a month. No benefits on pre-existing conditions for two years.

No. 4—Pays $33.34 a day after FOURTH day. Premium for ages 60 to 69, $11 a month. No benefits paid first 30 days of hospitalization for sickness leading to surgery. If condition was pre-existent no benefits paid for two years. No benefits paid for tuberculosis, cancer, gall bladder disorders, hernia and certain female diseases that develop during first six months of policy.

No. 5—Pays $10 a day after THIRD day and $20 a day after three months if patient is 65 or older. Premium, $6.20 a month. Usual exclusion provisions. Promises return of all premiums to policyholders who do not collect in 10 years.

No. 6—Pays $15.72 a day from EIGHTH to 60th day; $30 a day from 61st through 90th day, and $50 a day from 91st through 371st day. Premium, $6 a month. Promises maximum benefits of $15,682.88. Alternative plan pays $14.28 a day from FIRST through 31st day if surgery is performed. If turning to its earlier level. This has tended to sustain and increase the value of all those already in existence.

Surprisingly, though, brass beds are not highly priced on today's antique market in comparison to their relative cost when they were new. At a time when a fine chapel organ could be had for $36 and a man's imported linen suit for only $2.95, a solid brass bed cost $47.50, making it a real luxury item for its time.

But the original advertisements still hold true. Brass beds are an excellent investment today, because their prices are bound to continue rising. And buyers can be certain that with their great elegance and strength, there's no doubt they will continue on being handed on to future generations.

Nature hobby remains exciting

By CLARA HUSSONG

Over the 40 years that I've been writing this column, hardly an August has gone by that I didn't call attention to the beauty and variety of midsummer wildflowers along roadsides, in wet pastures, and in other more or less waste places.

That was what my first column was about in the Green Bay Press Gazette, dated about Aug. 23, 1933. The Post-Crescent began publishing the column in the spring of 1934.

Old timers will remember that it was still depression time for many people, including our own family. Ray and I, with our children, Marjie and Wayne, were living with his parents for part of the summer in the little village of Lark, in southern Brown County.

One August afternoon, I invited a group of young people, neighbor children and relatives, to take a walk with me.

We headed west of town on State 96 until we came to a wet pasture filled with flowers. There we stopped to explore.

The flowers came in white, red, yellow, orange, blue, rose, pink, lavender and purple. I knew most of them, having been a nature student since my seventh grade teacher lured me into this hobby.

We probably saw turk's cap lily, chicory, vervain, lobelia, cardinal flower, queen Ann's lace, swamp milkweed, JoePye weed and other midsummer blooms.

To me the pasture was a beautiful sight and I was amazed at the way the cars whizzed right by without anyone stopping to take a look or a smell.

Wisconsin Outdoors

Someone should tell them what they're missing, I thought wistfully.

One of the flowers we found was entirely new to me. It grew about a foot or two tall, and bore a spike of pink blossoms at the top, arranged in four rows on the square stalk. The leaves were narrow and tapering, growing in pairs opposite each other.

I made up my mind that the next time Ray drove into Green Bay to look for a job, I would go with him and have him drop me off at the library.

On consulting flower books at the library, I found that my mystery flower was obedient plant, or false dragonhead. It was a member of the mint family, but like many wild mints, it did not have the typical mint fragrance.

Its pink blossoms reminded me somewhat of snapdragons. The rows of blossoms can be pushed a quarter of the way around the stem and remain in the new position, hence the "obedient" part of the name.

Wouldn't people be interested in flowers, birds, butterflies, sights and experiences they could have through the various seasons, I wondered. Maybe I should try to write about such things.

So, in longhand, I sent in my first column. The editor accepted it as asked for more.

Calling attention to what's going on outdoors is still my main purpose in writing this column. New things keep happening, such as getting new birds on your list.

Margaret, Hazel and I saw our first king rail and two little gulls (that's the name) recently within 10 minutes in one spot. This rail is a rare bird here, and the little gull, smallest of all gulls, is a European bird and is rarer than rare.

On that same trip I found an obedient plant growing in a ditch. That reminded me of how I came to begin writing this column.

There are many perennials in the world of flowers. Do you know any perennial vegetables? The two most popular are asparagus and rhubarb. Many gardeners buy these as roots for fast results but they may be raised from seed. Rhubarb from seed requires two years to reach adequate size. Asparagus will take at least three years before they should be cut regularly and fully.

5. Carry an aerosol insecticide spray in your pocket or garden cart. When you know that you are going to be in a certain spot in the garden, for sunbathing, a cookout, or just work among the petunias and marigolds, you can minimize the threat of insects by spraying the area in advance.

A number of repellents have been found to be effective when sprayed in a yard. They can ward off insects for as long as several hours, but you should take care not to spray into the wind or directly on trees or plants, which can be damaged by some substances.

And, of course, there are a number of repellents you can apply safely to your skin in the form of creams, sprays, lotions or foams. Other insecticides are effective when applied to clothing.

Of utmost importance, safety experts warn, is that you make it clear to your druggist what you want—and what you want it for. And then before you spray, daub, smear or otherwise use insect antitoxins and repellents, read the label carefully.

Brass beds retain popularity

The brass bed is one antique item that has practically become a North American institution. It's seen generations come and go while its popularity has held up for well over a century.

Even as styles have changed and the horsehair and pine furniture of yesteryear have been banished to barns in favor of the newer and more glamorous styles, the brass bed has giving regular service in the most fashionable homes.

Many styles were made. Not all were solid—the majority being of hollow tubular construction to allow for a massive appearance with a minimum of weight.

They usually came in three widths, with the head higher than the foot, and with large side posts finished with impressive knobs, often rising well above the bed. Buyers had a choice of fancy or simple designs, and dull satin, high sheen, or a combination of both finishes.

When the brass supply became restricted by the requirements of World War I the output of brass beds declined sharply, and the changing styles of later years kept production from ever returning to its earlier level. This has tended to sustain and increase the value of all those already in existence.

Surprisingly, though, brass beds are not highly priced on today's antique market in comparison to their relative cost when they were new. At a time when a fine chapel organ could be had for $36 and a man's imported linen suit for only $2.95, a solid brass bed cost $47.50, making it a real luxury item for its time.

But the original advertisements still hold true. Brass beds are an excellent investment today, because their prices are bound to continue rising. And buyers can be certain that with their great elegance and strength, there's no doubt they will continue on being handed on to future generations.

About antiques hung on—often in children's or guest rooms, and now today enjoying a resurging popularity as quaint furnishing for stylish master bedrooms.

As a result, brass beds aren't always readily available, but their usefulness and value make them well worth considering should the opportunity ever arrive to pick one up.

During the latter half of the previous century and up to the time of World War I, brass beds were produced by many of the leading North American furniture makers, and they were featured items in the catalogs of the foremost mail order houses.

Many that were made of solid brass were described as having great strength and elegance, and buyers were advised that they'd be able to hand them down to future generations. But it's doubtful that even their advertisers realized just how valid their claims would prove to be, with their products even yet being just as bright and beautiful as new when polished and buffed, and still

Mountains keep climbers young

By JON HALVORSEN
Associated Press Writer

KEENE VALLEY, N.Y. (AP) — From the summit of 4,098-foot Cascade Mountain, Harry Gamble's eyes took in a 50-mile view of the Adirondacks in northern New York. He admired the crystalline lakes, the thick forests and especially the mountains.

"Wish we could do it all over again," said Gamble, a small, white-haired figure in a red windbreaker.

"Yeah, Harry," said Glenn Fish, his husky, deeply tanned friend.

"Back to '21, I mean," Gamble added, recalling the year he climbed his first peak.

Gamble, 74, and Fish, 63, belong to the Adirondack 46ers, a mountain climbing club. The only requirement for membership is to hike up all 46 Adirondack peaks judged by an 1897 survey to be 4,000 feet or higher.

They achieved that goal together in July 1969, after both had retired. For Fish, a former certified public accountant in New York City who now lives along the Hudson River in Riparius, the feat took less than three years. He then became president of the 46ers, a post he left last May.

Gamble took a little longer. He climbed 5,344-foot Mt. Marcy, New York State's highest peak, in 1921, the same year he arrived in Pottersville. Nearly 50 years later, after he had turned over his hardware store to his son, he reached his 46th peak.

Now the inseparable companions climb for the fun of it and in all seasons — despite snowstorms, blackflies, the encroachments of age and the fretting of Gamble's wife. "She's the darndest worrier," he says.

"I figure golf is for old men," Gamble says. "Doesn't seem very tiring to me, walking around and hitting a ball." Fish gave up golf after he moved north because, he says, he couldn't find anyone to play 36 holes a day.

Since the two began hiking together in 1968, Fish has been urging Gamble to pause during the ascents and savor the "woods experience." But on the day they climbed Cascade last month with Fish's 32-year-old nephew and two other hikers, Harry moved at his usual speed. Skipping over mud and fallen trees, dodging boulders and humming "Red River Valley," he arrived at the summit a half-hour before Fish. Only Fish's nephew kept up with him.

Later, after hiking for nearly six hours up and down Cascade and neighboring Porter, Gamble complained to a frazzled companion half a century his junior: "I was huffin' and puffin' something awful coming up this morning."

The 46 were first scaled officially in 1925 by George and Robert Marshall, brothers from New York City, and their guide, Herbert Clark. (Four of the peaks were found in later surveys to be less than 4,000 feet, but the club still counts them among the 46.) In the late 1940s, the handful of climbers who had followed in their footsteps organized themselves as the 46ers.

Now about 900 men, women and children, plus half a dozen dogs, own the club emblem. More than 200 accomplished the feat in the last two years alone. The burgeoning membership and the growing number of other climbers, including youngsters from summer camps whose counselors lead them to the peaks en masse, have begun to alarm some older hands.

A few suggest limiting the 46ers to 1,000 members, removing summit registers or simply disbanding. They point to the "herd paths" and erosion on the mountains and decry the "peak grabbers," those who climb the 46 only as a stunt and who take no interest in such club projects as trail maintenance, distribution of litter bags and a search-and-rescue team.

But a majority of 46ers who responded to a questionnaire last fall said they wanted to continue the organization, emphasizing service to the environment.

"I know we have to have some restrictions. Still, I don't see how you can limit the woods to a precious few. It's ridiculous," said Grace Hudowski, a founder and historian of the 46ers.

As the club has gradually lost its exclusive status, some have looked for new feats to accomplish, like climbing the 46 in winter. Last summer, two men set out to climb all 46 in five days. Before they could finish, one died of a massive heart attack at the age of 31.

Fish deplored the attempt. The mountains are there to be climbed, he said, but they are not a race course.

Home improvements may set new record

An average of more than two home improvement projects each will be undertaken by the nation's 48.8 million single-family homeowners in 1973, a national survey indicates. The estimated 105 million projects, by do-it-yourselfers and professionals, are expected to total a record $22.3 billion.

The survey, recently released by Building Supply News, a national building materials retailer magazine, was conducted by the Bureau of Building Marketing Research, the research arm of BSN. It queried by mail questionnaires 1,500 householders across the country, and gleaned an unusually high 75.5 per cent response. According to BSN publisher Harold J. Sugarman, the survey method and significant response make it "the most comprehensive study ever made of the home improvement market."

The study reported a variety of remodeling projects, from major kitchen modernization and room additions to relatively minor fireplace installations and gutter replacements. Redo plans were cited for homes in all parts of the country and in all price categories, and for new as well as older houses. Generally, remodeling motivations were economic and reflected a desire to stay in the present home rather than move to another.

The survey also concluded that: —The Northeast and South show about 27 per cent each; the West about 13 per cent.

—Kitchens will be the most popular remodeling project, with some 3.4 million planned at a total cost of about $3.2 billion.

—Bathrooms are next, with almost 2.8 million expected remodeling. An additional 732,000 new bathrooms are expected to be added. Total outlay should reach $2.2 billion.

—More than half of all homeowners who need more living space plan to expand their present homes rather than move.

—Home improvement dollars have been earmarked for both basic and luxury projects. For example: More than $1.5 billion is expected to be spent on new roofs and gutters; about $1.3 billion on central air conditioning.

—Individual remodeling costs will range from about $50 to $4,000.

—In almost all reported remodeling, much of the work was done by do-it-yourselfers—either alone or with some professional help.

—Most homeowners get remodeling information from local lumberyards, building material retailers and home improvement centers and/or friends who have undertaken similar projects.

—Homeowners say their biggest remodeling "head ache" is finding a qualified contractor. What they appreciate most is a retailer who "stands behind his merchandise."

Almost 50 diving enthusiasts from throughout the state participated in an "ecology dive" recently to clean up the Redgranite quarry, one of the state's most popular scuba diving areas.

One of the divers, Sandy Perez of Oshkosh, said the quarry is claimed to be "about 230 feet deep although divers have been able to confirm depths of only about 130 feet. But still, the quarry is one of the deepest and clearest inland sites in the state, and ideal for any kind of recreational diving."

Although ecology dives are not a new idea, to the best knowledge of the instructors, this is the first clean-up dive done in this part of the state, if not the whole state. Robert Korth, manager of a diving shop in Neenah, organized the dive.

Divers came primarily from Appleton, Green Bay, Fond du Lac, Neenah, Menasha, Oshkosh and other Fox Valley communities. "But people from all over the state heard about the dive, and many came out to help," one instructor, Rusty Hensley, explained. "Divers at the quarry from other parts of the state who had been unaware of the dive willingly pitched in to help with our scavenger hunt."

Most of the divers stayed here most of the salvagable refuse was, along the edges of the quarry. They spotted and brought up 50-gallon oil drums, large steel pickle vats, iron baskets, chains, beer and soda cans that littered the perimeter of the quarry.

According to Hensley, most divers stayed within depths of 10 to 20 feet, with no one going below about 50 feet. "Most divers just went along the edges, but even that was a significant clean-up, as shown in the amount of litter collected."

Redgranite Village President Leo Hendricksen arranged to help the divers by providing them with a truck to haul away whatever they found. A local service station donated the use of a wrecker for the afternoon, for hauling up particularly heavy or large items. The truck was filled and hauled away five times, and the wrecker was in constant use.

No estimates were made of the poundage of refuse brought up by the divers, but everyone agreed that the dive had helped to make Redgranite quarry a safer place for themselves and other divers and swimmers by clearing away cluttered areas below the surface.

Hitler assassination attempt site visited

By NICHOLAS LILLITOS
Associated Press Writer

WOLF'S LAIR, Poland (AP) — Tourists are flocking here in record numbers this summer to visit the spot where an assassin's bomb almost killed Adolf Hitler.

Cunningly concealed deep in a forest in northeastern Poland, miles from anywhere, lies this huge concrete bunker complex — Hitler's military headquarters.

It was from here, as tens of thousands of German troops fell on the nearby Russian front, that Hitler conducted the war. He mapped out his operations from the safety of a concrete bunker, so monolithic in structure, that even today it juts from the ground like some Egyptian tomb.

Closely located around Hitler's bunker were similar ones for his top henchmen.

To ensure their safety, a battalion of soldiers stood guard inside the camp. It was also surrounded by a mine death strip, 12 miles long by 450 feet wide.

Hitler in fact felt so safe that he called his headquarters "the Wolf's Lair."

But on July 20, 1944, a hot and humid day, Hitler and his aides decided to hold a map conference not inside the bunkers but in the comparative freshness of a wooden hut.

Present were Hitler, Wilhelm Keitel, chief of the high command of the armed forces, and other top generals.

Also in attendance was a certain colonel, Klaus von Stauffenberg, who walked in carrying a black leather briefcase. Inside it was a time bomb.

Von Stauffenberg placed the case under the map reading table and then made a hasty excuse to leave.

The bomb went off at 12:42 p.m. Some aides were killed, the map room was almost completely wrecked but Hitler survived with only minor injuries.

Amidst all the confusion von Stauffenberg managed to drive out past the camp sentries waving "special papers."

Later that day, however, he was arrested and shot. His fellow military conspirators were also executed.

Today only the outside structures of the Nazi leaders' bunkers remain. They were all blown up by German army engineers as the Russian advance drew closer. Hitler himself left here in November 1944, only to die five months later in another bunker in Berlin.

A visitor to the Wolf's Lair can still see the lengths Nazi planners took to conceal Hitler's bunker.

Its upper structure, reaches over 40 feet high, all of it solid concrete. Its roof is covered with tons of earth from which grew a giant blanket of grass and a dozen or so trees.

They're still growing today and from the air would look the same as the rest of the surrounding forest undergrowth.

The nearest town is Ketrzyn which before the war was part of Germany and known by the name, Restenburg. Now in Poland it has a population of 20,000 — all of them Poles.

"We're expecting a record 200,000 tourists to visit this year," said one Ketrzyn official. "Most of them don't stay for more than a day because they're just passing through to see Hitler's headquarters."

Of the total number the official said he believed 15,000 would be foreign tourists — most of them from Communist East Germany.

The red-bricked movie house where Hitler watched a film of the executions of the military conspirators is now in ruins.

And the headquarter's garage has been converted by the Poles into a big cafe and restaurant.

Polish and East German Children can be seen walking side by side investigating the ghostly nooks and crannies. Others find it an ideal place for playing war games.

It's not exactly what Hitler intended, but as one Pole put it: "That's an awful lot of concrete for a playpen."

Weather critical when it comes to latex paint

Exterior water-base latex paint is easy to apply and will last for years if you follow the recommended procedures and watch the weather. Other suggestions to help you prepare for painting and get the job done when the time is right include:

— Make sure the surface you plan to paint is clean and free of dirt, soot, loose paint, and mold. Sand glossy spots until they are dull.

— Treat all bare wood with a pentachlorophenol water repellent wood preservative (WRP). This preservative contains ingredients to resist decay and water damage. It requires at least two days to dry.

— Always apply a primer or first coat of paint to WRP-treated wood. You should also use a primer when using latex paint over old and severely chalked oil base paint. However, a primer isn't necessary for painting over latex or oil base paint in good condition.

Redwood and cedar are susceptible to extractive staining, a process where natural dyes in the wood move out and discolor the primer and topcoats. These woods require an alkyd-oil base primer with stain-resistant properties. You can use a high quality latex primer on woods like pine, where staining isn't a problem.

If you use WRP, an appropriate primer, and then apply two good quality latex topcoats in favorable weather, your paint job should last for 10 years. The weather conditions you need to watch out for are wind, low humidity, and rain.

Dry weather and temperature over 90 degrees will evaporate the water in latex paint and cause it to dry too rapidly, specialists warn. Paint scum may form in the pail and on the brush. This scum will make the paint difficult to apply and will result in a rough and uneven painted surface.

To beat the heat, paint only areas protected by shade. The east side is in the shade in the afternoon and the west side is shaded in the morning. Stop painting early enough to allow a couple hours of drying time before the freshly applied paint is in direct sunlight. A hot wood surface and warm, dry air will cause the water in latex paint to soak into the wood and evaporate too rapidly. When this occurs, the paint is difficult to apply and the resulting coat may be less permanent than paint that dries in a slower, more natural manner.

If the weather is dry and the wind is blowing, it's a good idea to sprinkle the side of the building with water from a garden hose 20 to 30 minutes before painting. The slightly moistened surface will lengthen the drying time.

Never paint if a rain storm is approaching. Partly dry latex paint will form thick crescent-shaped ridges beneath large raindrops. If these ridges dry, removal involves sanding and scraping and is difficult and time-consuming.

For more information on using latex and other paints, ask your county University-Extension agent for Fact Sheet A2484, "Guidelines for Selecting Exterior Latex (Water-base) Paint" or Fact Sheet A2482, "Steps in Successful House Painting."

Surprising facts about America's forests

BY MEL ELLIS

On the brighter side, would you believe that America still has about 75 per cent as much forest land as when Columbus landed?

Still further on the brighter side, would you believe that you, as a tax-paying citizen, are part owner—federal, state and county forests—of the greatest share of this country's forest lands?

What's more, did it ever occur to you that the eastern, heavily populated states have more forest lands than any of the western states?

Mostly in recent years, we have been concerned with the threat of running out of trees. And it is a very real threat emphasized by Presidents Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon. Except the shortage is not likely to occur because of a lack of forest lands, but rather because we are not managing this resource properly.

In the past we have discussed proper forestry management, written of multi-purpose forests (forests for hunting, fishing, skiing, snowmobiling . . . as well as for timber), and in the future we most certainly will again. So on this day let's just luxuriate in such statistics as show us up, not as a nation of steel and concrete, but as a land of greening trees.

According to a report from the American Forest Institute, the total area of forested lands in this country adds up to 758 million acres.

Of that total, about a third—248 million acres—is set aside in parks, wilderness areas and watersheds or is not suitable for commercial timber. This third of American forest land equals the size of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Austria, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium and Israel.

Forested States

The remaining 510 million acres of the total forest base is the commercial forest.

Now it has been generally believed that most commercial forest acres are owned by the Forest Products Industry. Not so. Government—state, federal and county—own about 142 million acres which is 28 per cent of the total commercial forests.

Private individuals, about 4 million persons, own about 60 per cent of the commercial forest lands, or 303 million acres.

The Forest Products Industry comes in a distant third, with about 13 per cent of the commercial forest, something like 66 million acres.

Still it is true that the land owned by the Forest Products Industry produces about a third of the timber required for wood products because it is intensively managed to increase yield.

Most revealing, however (at least to me), is the fact that the New England states as a whole have a bigger percentage of their land area in forests than any other part of the country.

I had always imagined that my native state of Wisconsin was, of course, more heavily forested than any eastern state with the possible exception of Maine. Imagine my surprise when I discovered that Rhode Island is 65 per cent forest lands, while Wisconsin has only 43 per cent of her land growing trees.

Of course, North Dakota is pretty flat and intensively cultivated, but would you believe it has but a 1 per cent ratio of trees, while populous New York state has forested areas comprising 57 per cent of its total acreage?

To carry it further, would you believe New Jersey has almost three times (percentage wise) as many trees as Montana? That Massachusetts has twice the forests, percentage wise, as Michigan? And Iowa's tree area covers but 7 per cent of her territory, while Alabama's forests cover 67 per cent of the area of that state?

Maine is the most heavily wooded state. Ninety per cent of its acres are forest. And, as mentioned, North Dakota comes in last with her 1 per cent.

Second most heavily timbered state is Vermont—1 per cent behind Maine. And Minnesota, touted as the land of sky blue water, has only 37 per cent of its acreage in trees as compared to Connecticut with 70 per cent.

Surprised? Believe me, I was!

Alaska, of course, leads with the most forested acres—119,051,000—but this represents only about one-third of her area.

Another Yankee quirk is that New England's forest lands are largely owned by private individuals, rather than by government or the Forest Products industry.

Most federal ownership of trees is in 11 western states, and in Alaska, where government owns 96.9 per cent of all forests.

Biggest gains in forest land have also been in New England. Since the abandonment of agricultural lands began in the 1800s, nature has been filling in fields and clearings to the extent that tree farmers are being urged to cut to maintain those edge areas so valuable to wildlife.

Ecological writers have been (and are) almost necessarily pessimistic in outlook. Despite every effort, the world's clean-up campaign is progressing at a snail's pace. So it is heartening to write that the forests, which are major element in our esthetic life and valued part of the life experience, are doing better than most people might have thought.

FORESTS

Publicity about environmental problems has done for forestry what half-century of hard work in the woods couldn't do.

Good forest management has insured thriving timber lands in Europe for centuries, and guided American foresters since the turn of the century.

Above all, the forests are renewable and therefore provide not only limitless versatility, but also endless bounty.

Trees, like other plants, respond to normal agricultural practices, such as fertilization, thinning, irrigation, and insect control.

Government estimates our need for forest products will double by the year 2000—less than a generation away.

Even so, we are still growing about per cent more wood a year than we can consume.

By increasing the yield of the land industry has proved we can literally create the wood resources we need.

Responsive double answer to take-out

BY ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Up to about seventy years ago, a player doubled only when he wanted to defeat the opponents and get increased penalties. Then the takeout double was developed by Major C. L. Patton in New York and Bryant McCampbell in St. Louis.

The takeout double is used over an opponent's low bid in a suit, provided that your partner has not bid or doubled. You want your partner to take out the double in his longest suit, and your double usually shows support for each of the unbid suits.

Sheinwold on bridge

RESPONSIVE DOUBLE

Sometimes the opponents interfere with the response to a takeout double. For example, the opening bidder's partner may raise the doubled bid. It is then up to the dealer doubler's partner to speak with an in-between sort of hand.

Let's suppose the opening bid is one spade. Your partner doubles, and the next player bids two spades. You have a singleton spade and four cards in each of the unbid suits, with perhaps a king at the head of each unbid suit. What should you do?

You hate to bid three of any suit, for you may pick the wrong suit. What you really want to do is pass the buck right back to your partner, forcing him to pick the suit.

Many of our leading experts use a double in this situation as a response to partner's double. Such a double, called a "responsive" double, promises reasonable values and asks partner to pick the suit.

PARTNERSHIP AGREEMENT

Don't spring a responsive double on your partner unless you have discussed it very carefully and have agreed to use it. Otherwise, he will assume your double is for penalties and he will pass instead of bidding.

If you do agree to use the responsive double, be sure to tell your opponents. They are entitled to know what you are up to when you alter the natural meaning of a bid, double or redouble.

Don't use the responsive double in a casual game. One serious misunderstanding will cost you more points than you can win back by the refinements of the new weapon. The responsive double is a good idea, but save it for your steady partner.

THE DOUBLE IN ACTION

The responsive double makes it possible for an aggressive partnership to reach touch-and-go game contracts. Such hands are not easy to play, so inexperienced players should be content with more conservative bids.

ble. South can rely on his partner for good support for the unbid major suit and some reasonable values. Hence South bids four hearts.

If East had passed, South might have bid only three hearts. When East's attempt at a shutout fails, he should go on to four spades instead of allowing South to play at four hearts. It doesn't pay to push the opponents into a makeable game contract and then subside.

TRUMP MANAGEMENT

The play calls for careful trump management. South ruffs the opening spade lead and return the king of hearts.

East refuses this trick on general principles, and South abandons the trumps for the moment. It would be dangerous to lead another trump if the suit broke 4-1 or if West had the king of diamonds.

South leads a club to dummy's king, forcing out East's ace. East returns a spade, forcing South to ruff for the second time.

Now declarer gets to dummy with a club and leads the jack of diamonds for a finesse. South continues the diamonds. West ruffs the third diamond, and dummy over-ruffs.

South ruffs dummy's last spade with his own last trump and leads a diamond to discard a club from dummy. East can take his two trumps, but cannot defeat the contract.

Benet home is given landmark designation

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — The boyhood home of Stephen Vincent Benet has been designated a national historic landmark.

The house, called the Commandant's House, is now occupied by Dr. and Mrs. George A. Christenberry. He is president of Augusta College.

The designation was awarded Tuesday by the regional director of the National Park Service, David D. Thompson.

The Commandant's House is part of the old Augusta Arsenal and was the home of Co. J. Walker Benet, and his family when the colonel assumed command of the arsenal in 1911.

Both Stephen and his brother, William, later became important literary figures. Stephen lived in the house until 1915. He is probably best known for "John Brown's Body," published in 1928. It won the Pulitzer Prize for American poetry in 1929.

Artist honored

The design of this postage stamp, honoring artist Henry Ossawa Tanner, has been announced by the U.S. Postal Service. The stamp is semijumbo in size and a part of the American Arts series. Tanner, a black painter who spent most of his career in France, based much of his art on Biblical themes.

Military uniforms make fascinating subjects for new stamp issues

Military uniforms, in all their decorative glory, have fascinated people all over the world for hundreds of years. Many nations have issued stamps depicting various forms of Army attire, and the latest to release a set of such stamps is Antigua, an island in the Caribbean which has had a long history of British military occupation.

The ½-cent portrays a private of Col. Zacharia Tiffin's Foot Regiment of 1701. The 10-cent shows a private of the 63rd Regiment of Foot soldiers, 1758 era. The 20-cent illustrates a Light Foot Company officer of the 35th Sussex Regiment of 1828. The 35-cent has a private of the 2nd West India Regiment of 1853. The 75-cent pictures a sergeant of the Prince of Wales Regiment of 1858.

A souvenir sheet containing all five values and bearing the official emblem of Antigua was also issued with the military set.

Antigua, since 1967 a self-governing state in association with Great Britain since 1967, still has close ties with England. It has maintained its reputation as a yachting center of the Caribbean.

The new stamps, issued July 1, are now available.

The recent designs of the U.S. memorial stamps honoring the late Presidents Truman and Johnson were selected by these chieftains not long before their deaths.

According to the U.S. Postal Service, LBJ submitted a copy of his favorite portrait to be held in the files for a memorial stamp on his passing. The photo was sent in September 1972.

The Truman design was based upon a photo taken by Leo Stern, a Kansas City photographer. Not only was this a favorite of HST but also of his wife and daughter.

The advance portraits are requested to forestall any controversy as to what illustration should appear on the stamp.

Prince Edward Antony Richard Louis Windsor, third son of Queen Elizabeth, carries on a family tradition by appearing on two stamps issued by New Zealand as this year's "Health Series."

Children of the reigning monarch were first shown on these stamps in 1943 when Edward's mother (then Princess Elizabeth) was featured with her sister, Princess Margaret. Others on the health stamps have been Prince Charles (now the Prince of Wales), Princess Anne and Prince Andrew, reports the Empire Stamp Galleries. Little Edward is the youngest of Elizabeth's children.

The 11th American Stamp Dealers Association International Stamp Course will be held Nov. 13 and 14 preceding the ASDA National Stamp Show in New York from Nov. 16 to 18. Only stamp dealers may participate in this sale and exchange session, and the results usually cause quite a stir in philatelic circles.

Beekeepers are hurting

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho (AP) — Eastern Idaho beekeepers say pesticides have left their honey business less than buzzing this year.

The beekeepers, who normally count some loss to sprayers as routine, say the loss this year ranges up to 75 per cent in some areas.

Especially hard hit are the prime production areas around Mud Lake and Terryton. Several producers said Tuesday they will be forced out of business if present losses continue.

St. Christopher still patron of numismatics

By CLEMENT F. BAILEY NLG

Saint Christopher may have been dropped from the rolls of the saints but not the patron of numismatics, Saint Eloi (Eligius).

In August of 1972, the French Medals Club, which is connected to the French all Franks," Clotaire II, to make a golden throne.

So much gold was given to the project that Eloi was able to make two thrones of gold for the king. When Clotaire II died, we find that Eloi stayed with the new ruler of France, Dagobert I.

Under Dagobert, the goldsmith Eloi produced his first coinage. His wealth also increased but he still wore simple garments and gave much of his money to the poor.

When King Dagobert died, Eloi retired to a monastery. Within two years, he was elevated to Bishop of Nozon. Saint Eloi died in 659 at the age of 71 after serving two kings and establishing many churches, monasteries and convents in his lifetime.

He became the "Patron of the goldsmiths, mintmasters, numismatists and all persons of finance," according to the legend on the medal. Saint Eloi is featured on the obverse with the famous throne and his coinage on the reverse of the French medal.

Numismatic notes

Mint in Paris, issued a huge four and one-half-inch medallion for Saint Eloi. As with all of their issues, they send photos of the new pieces to all of the numismatic field, along with some tidbits of information.

The tidbits were enough to force a search for more information about Saint Eloi. We found that he was born in A.D. 588 in Cadillac, near Limoges, France. He served his apprenticeship as a goldsmith and later accepted a commission from the first of the "Kind of

Plans for snowmo week made

EAGLE RIVER — Rep. Harold V. Froehlich has unveiled plans to have the week of January 14 through January 20, 1974, designated "National Snowmobiling Week."

In a speech before a group of Vilas County Republicans, Froehlich cited Northern Wisconsin as a primary example of the economically beneficial impact that snowmobiling can have on traditionally summertime resort areas.

The Upper Great Lakes Regional Commission estimated that $212,180,000 was spent during the winter of 1970-1971 in Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin on snowmobiles and related activities.

"This is not just $212 million spent on new vehicles," Froehlich emphasized, "but thousands and thousands of dollars going to independent small businessmen for food, lodging, clothing and the many other demands created by snowmobilers in pursuit of their favorite winter activity."

Froehlich noted that snowmobiling is one of the fastest growing winter sports. In 1960, fewer than 500 snowmobiles were produced. Today, there are over 600,000 made each year.

"This is an unbelievably phenomenal growth by any standard of measurement," Froehlich asserted.

Froehlich said that he hoped the week would effectively serve as a forum to encourage the establishment of more snowmobile trails, to teach the importance of safety and courtesy and to find ways to avoid any random environmental abuse.

Hunting mishaps decline

MADISON—The Department of Natural Resources has released a report of 1972 hunting accidents, indicating a slight decrease from the previous year.

During the 1972 hunting seasons, there were 146 hunting accidents compared to 150 during 1971. Forty accidents occurred during the firearm deer season and 98 during the small game seasons.

Eight fatalities were recorded, with two of those recorded during the deer gun season—the lowest on record.

In accidents where the cause was determined, the majority involved instances where the victim moved into the line of fire, was out of sight of the shooter or was mistaken for game.

Thirty per cent of all injuries were self-inflicted. Twenty-two per cent of all hunting accidents occurred on opening day of the season, and almost 70 per cent happened on weekends.

The report indicated that the vast majority of shooters in accidents did not graduate from a hunter safety course. According to Homer Moe, DNR's hunter safety supervisor, "The hunter safety course is making young hunters aware of proper gun handling procedures. Currently, we have 3,397 hunter safety instructors around the state and have graduated 66,574 students."

The Wisconsin hunter safety course includes eight 50-minute sessions covering general knowledge of firearms, basic rules of carrying a gun, a hunter's responsibilities, accident prevention, range firing and a vision test.

- Resident Daily Park Sticker 1.50
- Nonresident Daily Park Sticker 2.50
- Resident Small Game Hunting 5.25
- Resident Archer - Senior 6.25

- Resident Trapping 4.25
- Resident Deer Hunting 7.25
- Nonresident General Hunting 100.50
- Nonresident Deer and Bear 70.50
- Nonresident Small Game 50.50
- Nonresident Archer 25.50
- Nonresident Shooting Preserve 10.00
- Nonresident Fishing 12.50

Hunting season dates confirmed by DNR

RHINELANDER — The 1973 Wisconsin hunting season dates have just been confirmed, according to Russell DeBrock, conservation warden staff specialist for the north central district, Department of Natural Resources.

The dates announced by DeBrock show the following:

North central Wisconsin and much of the remainder of the state will have a basic 9-day buck season from Nov. 17 through Nov. 25. This hunt takes in the Thanksgiving Day holiday.

The early bear season will open Wisconsin's fall hunting on Saturday, Sept. 8 and will close Sept. 30. Hunting with dogs and bait is permitted in this bear hunt but baiting rules become more restricted beginning Sept. 1 when new rules take effect.

The deer bow season runs from Sept. 15 through Nov. 11. Archers may return to the woods Dec. 1 for a final month's hunt, ending Dec. 31.

Camping involves preparation

Wilderness camping away from the crowd takes skill, preparation and the right equipment — from plastic sheets to ward off damp air, and wheel bearing grease, to a tire pump.

Camping activities should begin at home, according to the American Automobile Association's Wisconsin Division, which suggests that campers practice erecting tents and tent trailers prior to the trip.

This shakedown procedure will aid campers in discovering and repairing tears and weak spots and, if needed, to waterproof the equipment, according to Sam Sloan, Wisconsin AAA state travel director.

Sloan said trailer wheel bearings should occasionally be checked and packed with recommended grease, and good spare tires for both car and trailer are a must and tent camping requires other considerations.

"A canvas tarpaulin or heavy plastic drape of the type used in building construction makes an ideal foundation for a tent floor. Either will help keep the tent warm and dry, and by keeping it away from direct contact with rough ground, will prolong the life of the tent's own canvas floor, he said.

Rubber or heavy plastic sheeting spread beneath air mattress and bedding materials will keep most of the cold, damp ground air from seeping through to the sleeper.

While packing for the trip, Sloan suggests campers try to visualize movements in detail through a typical day at the campsite.

"Doing this helps to bring to mind additional items — usually available at home — which should be included to keep irritations from spoiling the fun at camp," Sloan said.

For instance, a small tire pump is useful not only for inflating air mattresses, but also for blowing foreign matter from fuel lines on stoves, lanterns and outboard engines.

A flashlight is indispensable at camp. Take at least two extra flashlights and a spare supply of batteries and bulbs. A battery-operated spotlight with attached red blinkers comes in handy in case of road trouble, or for use as a marker to locate the camp at night.

Take along a small broom which will come in handy in sweeping out the tent and dusting twigs and other matter off the top of the tent. And a rope on which to string wash clothes and towels is always useful.

Ice in milk cartons — prepared in the freezer at home before leaving — is very useful in packing perishable food. Block ice in this form in a sealed, insulated chest will last for several days while keeping food dry. As ice in the sealed cartons melts, it can be added to the supply of drinking water.

A small shovel, ax, or large hatchet, and a large hunting knife should be packed, especially when traveling in bush country. The compact, one-man bucksaw makes a complete kit. The ax or hatchet should have a flat edge for driving stakes.

AAA stresses that care of the campsite itself is a basic responsibility of all who take part in the outdoors life. Camp wastes should be buried well away from the campsite and its water supply. Campfires should be thoroughly doused with water if they are to be left unattended. Matches should be allowed to cool and broken before discarding. Cigarette, cigar and pipe ashes should be thoroughly checked, and when it's time to break camp the campfire area should be covered with soil and water.

Snowmobile critics enthusiasts uniting

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — Major revisions in the state government supervision of snowmobiling and its assistance to the sport will be on the calendar of the state legislature when it resumes deliberations in October.

The standing committees on natural resources affairs in each legislative house will collaborate in the drafting of a bill which they hope may have the united support of the snowmobile clubs as well as some critics who worry about snowmobiles in relation to the natural environment.

northern zone of the state, but lately some projects have begun in more southerly districts also, and notably in central Wisconsin.

The first publicly financed trails were begun in 1971. The last year has shown a substantial spurt of activity, but snowmobile clubs are preparing to ask the fall term of the legislature to review the financing schedule to permit more construction, signs and other aids.

About a dozen of the trails now feature shelters for users and an increasing number provide sanitary facilities. Most also have parking spaces.

Some revisions in the state aid financing formula for snowmobile trails are expected to be approved by the legislature during its late fall session, and the DNR will propose that some of the idle money in the snowmobile license receipts fund be authorized for use on state-owned lands.

Several of the abandoned railroad routes acquired by the state for public recreational use would be ideal for development into snowmobile trails during the winter season, officials have suggested.

Some of them are now designated for the special use of bicycle enthusiasts during the warm weather period.

A rising pressure upon the lawmakers for categorical aid programs for the snowmobiling sport reflects the swelling fund balances in the DNR snowmobile license account.

The agency now has about $2,100,000 from the license fees sold at $9 for a three-year period. Budgeted expenditures thus far indicate that there will be a surplus of at least $600,000 at the end of the new licensing cycle, officials report.

Fatalities on rise in national parks

"People are killing and maiming themselves in appalling numbers in the national parks this year," Ronald H. Walker, director of the Interior Department's National Park Service, said recently.

Walker, deeply disturbed at the rising tide of fatal accidents, said: "Each day, the reports come across my desk. People killing themselves speeding on the park roadways. Toddlers left unattended to wander away and fall to their deaths in canyons. Boats overturning. People drowning. It's enough to make you sick."

So far this year, Walker said, 105 visitors have died in the national parks, compared to 85 at this time last year. While 1972 was the safest year for visitors to the parks since 1964, drownings are up 33 per cent — to 48 — this year over last.

"Simple common sense could have prevented many of these deaths," Walker said. "They are the result, most often, of negligence. Some people won't follow the rules of safety. They just won't use their heads."

In an effort to cut down on the accidents in the park service's 298 areas, Walker said he has ordered an intensive systemwide safety campaign, ranging from poster warnings to media messages and talks by park personnel. He also issued an order to the 10,500 employees of the National Park Service, calling on them to redouble their efforts to insure visitor safety.

"I don't mean just the rangers," Walker said. "I mean everybody, from historians and environmentalists to clerical personnel and maintenance men at out parks. The order is out: If you see someone doing something risky, if you notice a youngster running around unattended, do something about it! Everyone in the park service must, in effect, be his brother's keeper."

Walker said while it is impossible to post an army of rangers every 100 feet throughout the 30 million acres of parklands and waterways, "We can communicate our safety message at every opportunity to reach the visitor public, in campfire and nature talks, at visitor centers — wherever we are in contact."

"He said he was at a loss to explain why some people are ignoring the present warning systems which advise visitors that they are in a new and often strange environment, that they must respect the wild animals, the icy lakes and roaring streams, the mountains and gorges where a fall means instant death or a crippling injury.

"More people are visiting our parks than ever before," Walker said. "And I think that's wonderful. But more people are being killed in our parks than ever before. And I think that's a national tragedy."

Teamwork smothers forest fire

Editor's Note —For more than a week, forest fires have ravaged valuable timber stands in the West. One of the biggest fires consumed 10,600 acres in California's Eldorado National Forest. Newsman Mike Silverman spent two days with the fire crews at the edge of the flames for this account of the fire from the first wisp of smoke through a week-long battle to containment.

By MIKE SILVERMAN
Associated Press Writer
PLACERVILLE, Calif. (AP) — "Control, this is Baltic Point. I have a smoke report. Fortysix degrees, north side of Park Creek."

It is 2:10 p.m. on Friday, Aug. 17, as dispatcher Ed Grosch gets the first fire alert in his control room at U.S. Forest Service headquarters.

Within moments, other lookouts in 800,000-acre Eldorado National Forest are radioing from their towers that they, too, have spotted the fire.

Grosch orders all available manpower — perhaps 100 men — to converge on it. They are capable of dealing with a fire of up to 20 acres.

"When all the towers get fixes, we know damn well we've got something serious," Grosch said.

An air tanker is called to drop chemical retardant on the flames, burning in a ridge of pine and fir trees miles west of Lake Tahoe and the California-Nevada state line. A helicopter takes off to get an overview, and an investigator rushes to the source to probe the cause.

Fifteen minutes later, Grosch gets fixes on another fire only six miles away from the first. "Near the Pilliken spread," a lookout says, tagging the fire with the name of a nearby ranch.

The first fire will be contained in two days at a moderate 750-acre loss, but the Pilliken blaze will spread to become the forest's worst in 14 years, consuming more than 10,600 acres of prime timber before 2,400 fire fighters contain it a week later.

Within the first hour, the fires are raging uncontrolled over 75 acres. Grosch calls the Northern California Service Center at Redding, 200 miles to the north, for 450 firefighters, supplies, equipment, and a team of leaders to head the battle.

"This is the brass," explained Forest Service information officer Dick Serino. "Your fire boss, plans chief, fire behavior expert — the crew that will give the orders and be on top of the fire until it's out."

The leadership team arrives from Southern California's Angeles National Forest in two hours. "When you work for the Forest Service, you keep your bag packed," Serino said.

The team's first job is to estimate what the fire is likely to do, based on fuel conditions, winds and temperatures.

"When you're dealing with this kind of fire, you don't want to send all your men to where it's burning right now — you have to figure out where it's going to be burning in 12 hours and send most of them there," Serino said. "The only way to beat it is to build a line ahead of it and wait for the fire to get there."

In Redding, the call goes out for crews all over California.

It goes out for E. Bronson Potter in Angeles National Forest. "Our crew loves to get on a fire," said Potter, 20, a college student from La Canada working for the Forest Service during the summer. "We'll be out in the forest and when we hear those three beeps on the radio, we know that means get ready, there's a fire."

It goes out for Jose Campos, a 19-year-old farm worker in Marysville. For him and his buddies the call means work at $3.50 an hour — $1.50 an hour more than they make picking peaches. "They have all our names and how to get in touch with us," Campos said. "They called my brother and he went and got me."

And the call goes out for Frank

Andrew, 53, a minimum security prisoner at Growlersburg Conservation Camp near Georgetown. He and eight fellow inmates are bused with a guard to the fire camp to help with cooking chores.

By 6 p.m., Pilliken is at 200 acres, burning straight up a long ridge and spotting badly. Spotting occurs when sparks shoot from flaming trees and touch off new fires up to a quarter-mile away.

The tankers work until dark, bombing the flames with dimonium phosphate, a soggy reddish fertilizer. The air arsenal now includes DC6s and DC7s that have to fly 100 miles to Stockton for refueling.

All night ground crews work on stubborn spots, build a line around the fire at its source and prevent it from turning south if the wind changes. To build a line, they must hack, dig and chop away all live vegetation in a 6-to-20 foot swath.

On the morning of the second day, the fire — fanned by 65-mile-an-hour gusts — reaches 750 acres as it surges toward U.S. 50, the main highway five miles from where the blaze started.

Residents of summer homes on the tiny settlement of Kyburz are warned they may have to leave.

At 1 p.m. the Forest Service closes the highway, the main artery from San Francisco to South Lake Tahoe. It will be shut for a week.

The fire eats away at Ponderosa pine, Douglas fir and manzanita bushes across 3,000 acres of ridges, gulches and valleys. Crews keep it from jumping the highway, and fight to cut a line that will hold on the east side, where Carpenter Creek forms a natural boundary.

A quarter-mile from the flames, Jose Campos, wearing a metal helmet, plastic goggles and a red bandanna over his mouth, shovels dirt on a steep hillside to clear a line. Smoke chokes him and cinders sting his face. The sticky sweet odor of burning pine fills the air.

Fire boss Dick Montague calls for more help. California's supply is exhausted, so a call goes to the interregional headquarters at Boise, Idaho.

Bill Stump, a Chippewa Cree Indian, comes from Rocky Boy Reservation near Havre, Mont. For crew boss Stump and his men, fires mean a chance to get off the reservation where there is little work.

"This is our third fire in two weeks," said Stump, 39. "We just came from one in Montana and got in here after 33½ hours with no sleep. We're a traveling crew, like the Globetrotters."

Meredith Porte, 19, of Eugene, Ore., is one of a handful of women fighting the fire. For her it interrupted a routine summer of reforestation work at Willamette National Forest in Oregon. "They didn't want to send me at first, but I insisted," she said. The only woman on her 10-member crew, she cuts and digs with the rest.

Sand Flat camp has changed from a quiet picnic site into a bustling base spotted with portable toilets, washstands and cots. Crews, weary after 19 hours' steady work, stand in line for filet mignon steaks, then try to fall asleep in paper sleeping bags in the 35-degree nighttime cool.

"It reminds me of Nam," said a bread truck driver surveying the scene. "Except nobody's shooting."

On the third night Carpenter Creek burns up.

"It just went — burned right through all the drainage over into the next ridge," Serino said. The damage toll accelerates: 5,500 acres by the morning of the fourth day; 6,500 by afternoon, more than 8,000 the next morning.

On the sixth day, three stubborn miles of the fire's 28-mile perimeter remain open at the northeast corner, and the final gap won't be closed for two days.

E. Bronson Potter's crew is poised on the eastern flank on the seventh day. When the wind dies at dusk they will set a burnout with torches and diesel fuel to clear away all combustible growth, so when the flames arrive they will peter out.

"Get your hooks, Pulaskis, McClouds ... let's go," shouts Potter's boss, Bob Powers. They grab their tools, including the Pulaskis — axes with one blade for grubbing and another for cutting, and McClouds — heavy iron rakes for digging out rocks.

A helicopter buzzes overhead, a large red bucket suspended by a rope. The pilot dunks the bucket in the American River, filling it with up to 160 gallons to dump on hot spots, and sometimes, inadvertently, on fire crews as well.

Two tractors with huge blades head for Eagle Rock to cut a 20-foot swath.

The fire is declared contained at 8 a.m. of the eighth day.

Many events led to plot warning

badge and nameplate disappeared from a parked car.

A myriad of possibilities arose in which Giarrusso's car, the missing police identification and the alleged conspirators could be tied into a bizarre plot.

Giarrusso's car was found abandoned on a city street three hours before Nixon's arrival time. Nothing was missing from it.

The fact that the police uniform, badge and nameplate were missing was known in ample time for word to be put out to all over law enforcement agencies that anyone using them would be a phony.

But the Secret Service remained concerned.

A local police source said the Secret Service asked New Orleans police to pick up the men who had allegedly conspired to kill Nixon. Police refused to do so, the source said, because, "We didn't have enough evidence to make a case. We were watching them, but we didn't want to move until we had what we needed."

As Nixon prepared to head toward New Orleans, the Secret Service did what it had never done before: With the alleged conspirators still at large, it announced that a plot against the President's life had been uncovered.

The Secret Service said it had urged the President to cancel his parade. Nixon agreed to reroute the motorcade to get to the Rivergate, a convention center in downtown New Orleans near the Mississippi River, by a side street rather than down Canal.

By mid-morning, people were gathering behind police barricades along the original parade route, standing in knots under the bright sun.

It had been reported on radio and television that Nixon would not take that route, but the crowd continued to build slowly and Secret Service men continued their routine peeks beneath manhole covers along the route.

About an hour before Nixon's scheduled arrival, three bus loads of young bandmen drove up, ready to march with the President. Minutes later came a VFW honor guard. The four men, striking in their blue shirts and white trousers, unfurled their flags and waited.

But finally, after perhaps a half hour, it became clear that the parade really was off. The buses left and the honor guard marched off down Canal Street toward the Rivergate where the President would speak.

As they walked, the President's big blue-and-white airplane approached New Orleans International Airport. On landing, it taxied directly to the end of a strip in an isolated corner of the airfield where heavy security had been arranged.

The last time a jetliner parked at that spot was in 1972 when a hijacker who claimed to have a bomb aboard kept authorities at bay for several hours while the plane was repaired.

The presidential motorcade slowed once, briefly, as it sped downtown on an expressway. That was when police piled out of one of their cars to frisk a youthful hitchhiker who had it made it into what was supposed to be a secured zone. His backpack was searched and the youth was sent on his way.

A Dixieland jazz band was playing on one side of the street when Nixon's limousine pulled up. The car stopped at the entrance to an underground garage and the President and his wife, Pat, got out.

A cheer went up from the crowd which, because of the reported assassination plot, had speculated that Nixon would wheel directly into the safety of the underground garage before leaving the car.

But Nixon and his wife walked over to a crowd pressed between a barricade and the locked doors of a 17-story hotel to shake hands while the cameras clicked, the television film rolled and a band played Ol' Man River.

Nixon delivered his speech, returned to the airport and flew off to California without incident.

A local police source says the identities of the men who allegedly plotted against the President's life are known and that the men are being kept under observation.

But the official word from the police department is that no warrants have been issued for any arrests.

And the word from the police source is that no warrants are likely to be issued unless some new information turns up.

The chances of that, the source says, are slim

Wrong spark plugs cause of preignition

By Eugene B. Milmo

It is not unusual for an engine to lack pep, power and smoothness because of the wrong spark plugs. This is particularly true when engine speed and operational demands are such that plugs tend to run too hot.

Hot plugs are a common cause of a serious engine condition known as preignition. This means the fuel/air

A—Your system has (ital) no points (unit), and generally does not require periodic maintenance. Should it act up, however, don't tinker with it yourself or you may ruin it.

Q—While helping a stalled driver, I noticed that his new car has a jar-size metal unit connected between the carburetor and fuel pump. He couldn't tell me what it is or does. Can you?—R.T.

A—This is called a fuel-vapor separator. Its function is to prevent vapor-lock problems.

mixture in a cylinder is being ignited prematurely by the heat of the plug firing ends or before a spark actually occurs. When preignition becomes severe, engine noise—or detonation—develops. This is the signal of a dangerous situation which can quickly result in major engine damage.

If you suspect preignition problems, have the spark plugs inspected. Blistered, eroded or distorted electrodes (firing ends) indicate plugs are too hot for your driving needs. The cure, of course, is a change to a lower heat range (cooler spark plugs).

Hotels of future plan far-out sites

Someday you may check into hotel, go to your room, look out the window and see:

A porpoise staring back at you from the depths of the ocean.

A flock of penguins slipping and sliding on an ice floe a few yards away.

A crater-marked landscape with the planet Earth peeping over the horizon.

"A traveler may see those things because the hotel of the future just might be located on an ocean floor, or in the Antarctic, or even on the Moon," said Marvin P. Price, senior vice president of Diners Club. "Lodging industry leaders are already thinking about such sites, and some experts believe it's only a matter of time and technology until hotels are built in such far-out locations."

The thinking of the experts is based in part on travel trends of recent years, Price explained.

"Hotels are built where people want to go," he said. "Years ago they were built in the center of cities and in resort areas at the end of railroad lines. Then came the era of the automobile travel and motels along the highways. Now the airplane opens every corner of the globe and lodging accommodations are built on mountains, in deserts and forests—because people want to go to these places.

"Today we find credit cards used in out-of-the-way places in 150 countries and territories around the world. Charges may be made in a small inn hidden in the Japanese countryside as well as a gourmet restaurant in Paris, or in a hotel in Kenya as well as one in Kansas City. People are constantly looking to go to new places, to do new things."

No matter how unusual the location of the future hotel, travelers will be pampered with conveniences, he said.

"Guests will save time by registering themselves and checking out with credit cards inserted into terminals linked to computers. Meals and hotel services will be charged the same way."

Guests will enjoy large-screen movies, stereo concerts and other entertainment in their rooms on tape and film from the hotel library. Some hotels will be family entertainment resorts, offering everything from nursery schools and playgrounds for youngsters to athletics and theaters for adults.

Hurricane damage has reached high levels

BY WILLIAM BENDEL

Hurricanes are causing greater economic losses in the United States than ever before. To get some idea of what is happening, consider just three facts:

—From 1926 to 1950, property damage caused by hurricanes in the U.S. averaged about $40 million per year.

Weatherlore

—More recently, a total of over $2,840 million in damages was caused by only two hurricanes, Betsy in 1965 and Camille, in 1969.

—Last year, hurricane Agnes alone caused damages, mainly from flooding, of more than $3 million!

Hurricanes are not becoming any more frequent or more powerful, so why this tremendous increase in destruction? For one thing, the amount of building and development in the gulf states and the eastern sea-board has mushroomed.

This means that many more structures are now vulnerable to these tropical storms. Inflation has also taken its toll. The number of dollars needed to construct a building has skyrocketed because of increased costs of labor, materials, and scarcity of land.

And while hurricane damage is limited to certain regions of the U.S., all parts of the country are affected economically. For example, if Florida is struck by a serious tropical storm, the damage sustained by fruit and vegetable growers there will soon be reflected in higher prices in supermarkets all over the country.

As hurricanes become more costly, the need for more accurate detection and warning systems increases. As hurricane regions become more populated, federal aid to disaster victims becomes more expensive. The tax dollars to pay these bills come from all parts of the U.S.

Next week: Should We Modify Hurricanes?

Zion Park Grand Canyon mini

Zion National Park is sort of the Grand Canyon in reverse. You view the magnificence by looking up.

It's a personal park, almost vest-pocket in size, compared with the Grand Canyon National Park and its Utah neighbor, Bryce National Park.

It houses such wonders as the world's largest monolith, "The Great White Throne," which is hard by towering peaks called the Three Patriarchs. Still, all of its wonders are within a few minutes' riding or walking time from the Zion Lodge and cabins.

One of the favorite walks is an easy one to Weeping Rock, the sheer wall of a box canyon from which water tumbles or seeps, depending on the season, less than a half mile and a half hour away.

A full range of services is available from bicycles, through nature walks supervised by members of the National Park Service, swimming, amateur theatricals by the staff, and even campfire lectures.

Prices at Zion Lodge range from $7 a day for a single in a standard cabin, to as little as $19 for a family of four in a two-room cabin.

Motor bus tours from Cedar City, Utah, range from one to five days covering all three of the parks. Flights into Las Vegas and Phoenix connect with bus and other air services into Cedar City.

Dear Readers: everyone loves flowers, especially quick, quick crocheted ones. Here is a pattern for a truly altogether lovely carnation. Make a single one in snowy white Coutura or Magic Yarn for a striking boutonniere for graduation or wedding. It looks as though it's fresh from the florist, and what's more it stays that way.

It can be tucked away with all the other lovely memories such as bride and groom keep. Make it from leftovers to top a pretty gift package or plan your spring bouquet with long wire stems suitable for the decor of any desired room. This floral creation is a perfect complement to the corsage previously given as a base for a money gift.

MATERIALS: 1 ball of any denomination, 1 dark green chenille stem, 12 inches long, 1/2-oz. white yarn, 3 yds of dark green yarn, 1 paper clip, 1 1/4 inches long.

Place the ends of the stem and the paper clip against one side of the casing and stitch down the length of the casing, so that there will be 10 sts for the section containing the clip and 6 sts as a base for the flower.

Quiet appeal in clean lines of low ranch

By Andy Lang

Attractive on the outside, this house has a simple floor plan which has evolved from the efforts in recent years to squeeze the most out of the building dollar in terms of space and convenience.

It's a three-bedroom ranch that relies on its good proportions to sit wide and low on the lot. Since the habitable area is less than 1300 square feet, architect Fenick A. Vogel had to be certain that the floor arrangement included no wasted space. One of the ways in which he accomplished this was to combine the living and dining rooms in one area at the back of the house. The space is open and flexible enough to serve any kind of formal or informal purpose.

Focal point of the entire area is a corner fireplace with raised hearth in the living room portion. Sliding glass doors extend the room to a flagstone patio where a built-in barbecue adds to the scope of outdoor living possibilities.

A bright and spacious kitchen is located at the front of the house, with the front exposure shaded by the porch to provide privacy and protection from excessive light. A good arrangement of appliances and counter space along three sides provides convenience as well as plenty of elbow room. The breakfast area is bright and cheery, since it has tall double windows, and its likely to be a favorite spot for most family meals.

A laundry room, convenient to the kitchen, features a service entrance, with a mudroom area providing access to basement stairs and garage. A handy closet in this area will help to keep the house neat in nasty weather, being a good place to leave wet and muddy gear.

There are three bedrooms and two baths included in the bedroom wing. The master bedroom features a private bath with stall shower, has double exposures and is located at the back of the house for privacy and quiet. The two front bedrooms are separated by a wall of closets and share a full bath across the hall.

The generally board-and-batten exterior is accented with brick veneer and shutters. The brick was used sparingly, yet where it is most effective: on the loggia section and along the base of the bedroom wing to provide a good background for a front flower garden.

Three equal parts comprise the front elevation. The middle section is visually set back by the shade of the front porch and balanced by the bedroom and garage wings.

Design R-26 is the type of house that has become popular by what might be called word-of-mouth advertising. As real estate authorities know, a three-bedroom house with a two-car garage is in the most demand.

R-26 STATISTICS

Design R-26 has a living room and dining room combined in one area, a kitchen, three bedrooms, two bathrooms, a laundry room and a foyer, totaling 1256 square feet. The two-car garage includes storage nooks close to the door to the patio. The over-all dimensions of 73 feet 10 inches by 26 feet 11 inches include the garage. The architect has shown how the basement may be divided for informal activities.

Simple lines

Costly breaks and angles are avoided in this three-bedroom ranch. Rooflines and foundations are simple and economical. The good proportions give the structure a quiet appeal.

Indoor gardeners put up with lots of nonsense

Human nature being what it is, I suppose there will always be "authoritative" statements made by people who really don't have the faintest idea what they're talking about. As a group, indoor gardeners are probably subjected to more of this type of nonsense than anybody else, so when you hear a statement that doesn't sound reasonable, don't take it as gospel-truth just because it was uttered by an "authority."

A case in point is the advice I've heard about how to grow strelitzias and when to expect bloom. These plants, known as Bird-of-Paradise, have intrigued indoor gardeners for years and years; their oddly-shaped, exotic blooms, brilliant orange and vivid blue arising from red-edged bracts, are the goal many seek but few reach. Why? Well, to begin with, these plants are native to South Africa, and they are summer-to-fall bloomers in their native habitat. However, summer in South Africa is winter here; the plants need full sun in order to produce flowers, and during our winters they aren't apt to get it.

Strelitzias must be mature plants before they're willing to flower, and because they're slow-growing, this means you may have to wait three or four years for bloom, even if you provide ample sunlight. But, since the plants are so large even in their juvenile stage, gardeners tend to confuse size with age, and expect bloom long before it's due. Finally, sunlight is not the plants' only requirement; they must also have fairly high humidity, moderate temperatures, and when watered, the soil should be thoroughly drenched and then allowed to go partially dry.

Bird-of-Paradise is a splendid plant for a moderately cool, humid window where strong sunlight enters all fall and winter. As mentioned earlier, this is a large plant, often reaching a height of five feet and spreading nearly that wide. It will need, at maturity, a pot at least ten inches wide, and would appreciate having an even larger one. Since the plant resents any root disturbance, start it out in the large pot even though the plant may still be quite small, or even being started from seed; don't repot it until it is quite literally bursting its container.

Don't bother counting leaves, or trying to induce faster growth by cutting them off, or using special-formula plant foods to "encourage" flowering. Give your plant good care and have patience; when it matures it will begin producing the flowers you're hoping for.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Q. My house plants have been out in the garden all summer and look just great! What is the best time to pot them up again? I thought perhaps I should do it well ahead of our first frost date.

A. Your house plants probably look so well because they've spent all summer happily spreading out their roots in all directions! And there is just no way you're going to be able to dig them up and pot them without a lot of root disturbance and inevitable damage. As a result, your plants will undoubtedly lose part of their foliage, unless you cut them back to compensate for the root-loss. To help them recover as much and as rapidly as possible, spray them frequently (after you've potted them again) with a fine mist of water, keep them shaded and protected from drafts, and next year leave the plants in their pots!

Q. In your column you frequently mention "warm" temperatures, or "cool." Would you care to be a little more specific? What's warm to one person might be quite chilly to another, you know.

A. When I'm referring to temperatures for house plants and use the word "warm," I mean over 60 degrees at night, which is when temperatures are apt to be the lowest, and up to 80 (or over) during the day. By "moderate," I mean temperatures ranging from a low of 50 degrees to a high of 70 or a little over. A nighttime temperature drop of about 10 degrees is thought to be beneficial to most house plants, and many people find cooler night temperatures pleasant. I don't; I prefer a constant 78 degrees, and my plants, for the most part, have adjusted nicely to this.

Q. When rooting cuttings in water, is it necessary to change the water every day and scrub the container?

A. Not unless the water shows signs of fouling.

Katherine B. Walker has written a booklet on the care and culture of GLOXINIAS and other tuberous-rooted members of the Gesneriad Family. For your copy of Gloxinias, write to Mrs. Walker in care of this newspaper, enclosing a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 25 in coin to cover printing and handling costs.

Mrs. Walker is always happy to hear from readers, and whenever possible she answers their questions on house plants in her column, but she regrets that because of the vast volume of mail received she cannot reply to individual letters.

Here's the Answer

Q. — The rain water from one of the downspouts on our house settles right into the ground at that point. A year ago I tried using a splash block at the end of the downspout, but it only partly solves the problem. I have read that drain tiles can be used to send off the water to a dry well. In our case, we do not need a dry well, since there is a drainage ditch about 30 feet from the house and I would like to steer the water into that ditch. I am puzzled by what is meant by drain tiles and how they can carry water away.

A. — The term drain tiles is a slight misnomer. They actually are pieces of underground pipe. There's no trick to laying the pipe. Place the first piece so that it is about 10 inches below the surface, with an elbow connecting it to the bottom of the downspout. It should slant slightly away from the elbow, with a pitch of about one inch per one foot — as should all the succeeding pieces of pipe, so that there is an easy flow of water from the downspout to the drainage ditch. Be sure to pack in the dirt solidly over the lengths of pipe so that the ground will not give way when walked on.

Q. — I read in your question-and-answer column some time ago about the way in which to tell whether a stain on wood is mildew or hardened dirt. At that time, I had no problem with mildew. Now I do. Can you repeat the method?

A. — If you rub a mildewed area with a household bleach, the stain will disappear quickly. If it's dirt, the area may get a bit cleaner, but the stain will remain.

Q. — I applied a coat of penetrating sealer to the wood paneling in our family room several weeks ago. I used a brush to put it on. It seemed all right, but when you touch it now it has a very slight tackiness to it. What went wrong?

A. — It appears that you may have neglected to wipe off the excess sealer a few minutes after you applied it. If you still have the container that the sealer came in, read the label and you will find explicit instructions about the wipe-off process. Brush the affected areas with a cloth lightly moistened with denatured alcohol to remove the tackiness. You then will have to decide whether another application of the sealer is necessary.

There are no dividers between the living room and the dining room in this open area. Glass doors to the right of the fireplace lead to the rear patio.

Hopper works at Elvehjem

MADISON — An exhibition of 89 selected oils, watercolors, drawings and prints from the Edward Hopper Bequest to the Whitney Museum of American Art will open at the Elvehjem Art Center on Monday, Sept. 10.

A reception for Friends of the Elvehjem Art Center will be held at the museum on Sunday evening, Sept. 9.

Works in the exhibition range from Hopper's student days at the turn of the century to his death in 1967. Among the oil paintings are "Self-Portrait," "Railroad Sunset," and "Cape Cod Sunset," paintings of the artist's early years in France; landscapes done in Maine and Cape Cod, and a number from his student days.

The watercolors in the exhibition are mostly from his mature years. The drawings include nudes done at the Whitney Studio Club, landscapes, as well as many studies for the artist's major paintings.

The prints include impressions of such well-known works as "Evening Wind," "East Side Interior," "The Catboat," and "The Lighthouse."

Edward Hopper was a pioneer in the realistic portrayal of the American scene. According to Director of the Whitney John I.H. Baur, the Hopper Bequest is probably the most important bequest of an American artist's work to a museum.

"For the public and especially for scholars and students, it establishes a corpus of work in which the development of his art can be traced and where the evolution of many paintings can be followed through preparatory studies and drawings," said Baur.

The fully illustrated catalogue for the exhibition with nine color plates was written by Lloyd Goodrich, Consultant to the Whitney Museum, its former director, and life-long friend of Mr. Hopper. He is also the author of "Edward Hopper," an illustrated biography. The 64 page catalogue can be purchased at the Elvehjem Sales Desk. There are also large color postcards available.

When the exhibition closes on Oct. 21, it will travel to the Toledo Museum of Art.

Hours at the Elvehjem are 9 a.m.-4:45 p.m. Monday through Saturday and from 1-4:45 p.m. Sunday.

In Madison show

These two paintings by Edward Hopper will be included in the Hopper show to open at Madison's Elvehjem Art Center on Sept. 10. Above is "Two Trawlers" (c. 1924), a watercolor, while below is "New York Interior" (c. 1921), an oil on canvas.

Sunday afternoon programs planned

MADISON — In order to allow the Elvehjem Art Center's visitors to enjoy the museum's permanent collection in depth, the Elvehjem will initiate a series of Sunday afternoon programs beginning in September.

Each month during the academic year will be devoted to a specific area of the permanent collection on which weekly lectures, music and storytelling will be based.

Guest lecturers and musicians will be invited from various departments of the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

The month of September will feature ancient art in the Elvehjem collection. On Sunday, Sept. 16, Professor Herbert Howe of the Classics Department will speak on "Ancient Coins." On Sunday, Sept. 23, Gerturde Herman, Associate Professor of Library Science will recount "Greek Myths in the Elvehjem Collection." On Sunday, Sept. 30, Warren Moon, Assistant Professor of Art History will speak on "Ancient Greek Vases."

Each of the September programs will be held in the museum's gallery of ancient art on the fourth floor. They will begin at 3 p.m. and last approximately one hour.

Copernicus subject of art exhibit

MILWAUKEE — An exhibit titled "Nicholas Copernicus — His Life, Work and Ideas," a duplicate of the official Polish exhibit on the astronomer from the Museum of Technology in Warsaw, Poland, will be displayed at the Milwaukee Public Museum, Sept. 19 through Oct. 3.

The exhibit is being displayed in Milwaukee in cooperation with the Copernicus Foundation, Chicago, and the Kopernik 500th Anniversary Committee of Wisconsin under the sponsorship of Pabst Brewing Company. It was produced by the Polish National Technical Organization.

Divided into three parts, the first section is concerned with the dissemination of the Copernicus theory that the earth revolved around the sun, emphasizing the views of Aristotle and Ptolemy. The second part features the work of those who followed Copernicus, such as Kepler and Galileo. The third part is devoted to the life of Copernicus, where he was born, studied, worked and died.

Three-dimensional models illustrate his theory, known as the heliocentric theory, which overturned pre-Renaissance systems of earth-center philosophy and influenced new scientific outlooks. These models illustrate precession as not a motion of a sphere of permanent stars but the result of the motion of the earth's axis, the "loop" movement of the planets, and "epicyclic" or circle movement. There are also reproductions of Newton's telescope and the telescope of Galileo, a model of a "armillary sphere," and a facsimile of "De Revolutionibus," the published work on Copernicus' theory. An 4 x 8 foot plexiglass has an engraved image of Copernicus.

will concentrate on medieval art during the month of October, Indian art in November, and Renaissance art in December. Specific topics will be announced before the beginning of each month.

Because of the new Sunday afternoon series, the Elvehjem's mini-lecture schedule has been changed to Tuesdays and Fridays at 12:15 p.m. All 15-minute mini-lectures are free and open to the public. Interested visitors should meet with the Elvehjem docent in the Paige Court.

The mini-lecture schedule planned for September is as follows: Tuesday, Sept. 11 — "How to Look at a Photograph;" Friday, Sept. 14 — "The Photographer as He Relates to Society;" Tuesday, Sept. 18 — "The Photographer as He Relates to his Personal Environment;" Friday, Sept. 21 — "Approach to the Bridge at Night by George Bellows;" Tuesday, Sept. 25 — "Edward Hopper," and Friday, Sept. 28 — "Edward Hopper's Cities."

Mini-lectures arranged in conjunction with the Edward Hopper exhibition, that opens at the Elvehjem on Sept. 10 will continue in October.

MADISON — Visitors to the Elvehjem Art Center will now be able to enjoy a number of contemporary prints from the museum's permanent collection displayed in the Malcolm H. White Lounge opposite the sales desk.

"The selection of prints will be changed several times a year," said Carlton Overland, Curator of Prints and Drawings, who is trying to make the Malcolm H. White Lounge into a comfortable display area.

Instead of having to walk from one print to the next, the visitor can sit comfortably on a leather sofa and look at the bold, modern graphic works on the walls around him.

"This area adds a new dimension to a visit to the Elvehjem Art Center," explained Overland.

"We want the Malcolm H. White Lounge to be a pleasant place where people can come in, sit down and enjoy our extensive print collection," Overland said. "We have over 1,000 prints and until now space limitations have prevented us from exhibiting more than 1/50 of them at any one time," he added.

On display for the next few months in the Malcolm H. White Lounge are works by Melvin Butor, Eugenio Teller, Robert Broner, Dennis Beall, Frances Myers, Peter Marcus, Warrington Colecott and Dean Meeker.

WAUSAU — More than 100 artists from Wisconsin and other states are expected to enter the ninth annual Wausau Festival of the Arts here Sept. 8-9.

The festival will be held at the University of Wisconsin Marathon County center, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day.

In addition to the art exhibits, a program of poetry, performing arts, music, children's art contests, and kite-flying competition is scheduled.

Officials expect several thousand people to attend the festival.

Over $1,000 in awards will be presented, including prizes for best-of-show, best oil, best watercolor, best drawing, best graphics, best ceramics, best sculpture, best photography, and best crafts.

Tell art fair Sept. 2

NEW GLARUS — The 12th annual Wilhelm Tell Outdoor Art Fair will be staged Sunday, Sept. 2, at the Village Park here during the annual "Wilhelm Tell" drama and weekend Swiss festival in that community.

The outdoor art fair will be from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m., and it will feature approximately $1,000 in prize money. Open to professional and amateur artists, the fair is held during the Labor Day weekend festivities in the village.

Awards will be announced during the afternoon, when judging has been completed.

Last year, 200 artists at the Tell Art Fair exhibited their works, and their sales were over $12,000. The fair is open to the public without charge. Proceeds are used to promote art appreciation, to provide student scholarships to University of Wisconsin summer art workshops, to assemble a permanent art collection for New Glarus, and other projects.

All work exhibited at the Tell Art Fair must be completely original, with no commercially manufactured parts except chains on jewelry. Artists are encouraged to bring materials and work at their art during the show.

During the Labor Day weekend festival in New Glarus, the 36th annual productions of Schiller's "Wilhelm Tell" drama will be staged — at 1 p.m. Saturday and Monday, Sept. 1 and 3, in English, and on Sunday, Sept. 2, in its original German.

Traditional Swiss foods will be available at New Glarus stores, shops and restaurants and residents of the southern Wisconsin village will again open their homes to overnight guests.

Nathan Cummings collection at Art Institute in October

CHICAGO — "Major Works from the Collection of Nathan Cummings," a selection of approximately 90 19th and 20th century paintings, drawings and sculptures owned by the well-known industrialist and former Chicago resident, will be on view in the A. Montgomery Ward Gallery at The Art Institute of Chicago from Oct. 21 through Dec. 9.

Major pictures by Braque, Mary Cassatt, Cezanne, Gauguin, Manet, Monet, Berthe Morisot, Prendergast, Renoir, Vlaminck, Vuillard and others will be shown as well as several works by Degas, Kandinsky, Leger, Matisse, Picasso, Rouault and Stutne. Sculptures by Arp, Giacometti, Manzu, Matisse, Henry Moore and Poncet will also be displayed.

A fully-illustrated catalogue with 28 color plates, a preface by Leigh B. Block, Chairman of the Art Institute, and an essay by John Maxon, Vice President for Collections and Exhibitions, will accompany the exhibition.

The Nathan Cummings collection began in 1945 when Cummings was in Paris. He saw a painting in a dealer's window which he liked and, although the artist's name meant nothing to him, he purchased the picture, a Pissarro harvest scene of 1893. Cummings has continued to build his collection by buying works which appeal to him.

In his catalogue essay, John Maxon writes, "Nathan Cummings has collected personally and for his own pleasure without regard to what fashion has dictated or what is merely the chic thing of the moment. The result of this independence of feeling is a collection of distinction which has a distinctly personal accent. One is then led to consider the very qualities which make this an idiosyncratic collection. One of the compelling factors is an intense feeling for color, common to the paintings, the drawings, as well as, even, the sculpture."

A number of works from the Cummings collection were shown at The National Gallery of Art in Washington in 1970 and The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York in 1971. Since these exhibitions, Cummings has continued to collect. Several new acquisitions will be seen at the Art Institute. Among these are an unusual early Toulouse-Lautrec, "Seated Ballerina, 1885," acquired in 1971 and a Delaunay, "The Football Players, 1930," acquired in 1972.

CHICAGO — Leigh B. Block, Chairman of The Art Institute of Chicago, announced that the Trustees of the B. F. Ferguson Fund have approved a commission to Richard Hunt for a memorial sculpture honoring Carl Sandburg.

The work will be placed at the University of Illinois Circle Campus.

The sculpture, titled "Slabs of the Sunburnt West," is the artist's proposal after a poem by Carl Sandburg of the same title. It was inspired by images in the poem. The proposed work will consist of a bronze ground approximately 27 x 30 feet with several sculptured slabs of welded bronze plate varying in height from three to nine feet.

Ferguson's will provides that the Fund shall be used under the direction of the Board of Trustees of The Art Institute of Chicago for the "erection and maintenance of enduring statuary and monuments, in the whole or in part of stone, granite, or bronze, in the parks, along the boulevards, or in other public places within the City of Chicago, Illinois commemorating worthy men or women of America, or important events in American History."

Richard Hunt was born in Chicago and is a graduate of The School of The Art Institute of Chicago. He has exhibited widely in major museums throughout the country. A retrospective exhibition of his work was held at the Art Institute in 1971. He is represented in the Institute's permanent collection by a sculpture entitled "Hero Construction."

Block stated that it is estimated that the Sandburg Memorial sculpture will be completed by the summer of 1974 for installation and dedication that Fall.

For the second time in the past 15 years, a payola scandal is brewing in the pop music business. But this time, more than money payoffs is involved. There are rumors of prostitution and drugs being offered to disc jockeys as incentive to play a certain recording. Jay Sharbutt begins a two-part in-depth examination of the scandal, starting on page 4.

Whole new career for Binnie?

By William Wolf

NEW YORK — "I don't know why it is, but women in a movie audience seem to see me in terms of all ages," says veteran actress Binnie Barnes, who has such a showy role in the film "40 Carats" that she could leap into a whole new career.

Many long-time movie fans who remember Miss Barnes in the flock of films in which she appeared years ago had just about forgotten that she existed. Her last major role was more than 30 years ago, and in the 1960's she did a few cameo appearances in "The Trouble With Angels" and "Where Angels Go . . . Trouble Follows."

Now back as the mother of Liv Ullmann, she looks great, and she gets off funny remarks, whether on screen or off, with a snappy zest that makes her a standout.

"Somehow seeing me on screen gives new life to women who feel that after all, if I can dance with Gene Kelly, as I do in the movie, they could do it too," speculated Miss Barnes at lunch in a chic Italian restaurant in Manhattan one recent afternoon.

"What also excites me is that not only the women who seem to see me as any age from 50-90 relate to me," she continued. "The letters I get and comments I hear tell me that young kids relate to me too. There's a whole new audience that seem to compare me with their mothers."

The actress doesn't mind sounding ancient when she talks. "There's nothing secret about me," she said. "Go ahead and look up my age in any book." One directory listed her birth year as 1906, which would clearly seem to be impossible when you see how attractive and youthful looking she appears now.

Miss Barnes, a performer in England before hitting it big in the movie "The Private Life of Henry VIII", was the toast of the London stage in Noel Coward's "Cavalcade." In Hollywood she did such movies as "The Last of the Mohicans," and "Magnificent Brute."

She is married to producer Mike Frankovich, and they live in a spacious house where they show movies every week and invite assorted friends to see the latest flicks.

"We insist on quiet in our screening room," she noted. "However, Mike and I make it clear to our guests that anyone who doesn't like the film can feel free to leave in the middle. But we don't permit talking or comments while the picture is on."

How did she come to appear in "40 Carats?" She asserted:

"My husband made me do it. After all, he's the producer. No, that's not really true at all. As a matter of fact a deal was cooked up by the director, Milton Kat-selas. There were other people reading for the part. I was asked to read with the others, just to assist them in doing their lines, and that's all I thought I was doing.

"The next thing I knew Kat-selas had told Mike that I was the one he wanted for the role. Mike was as surprised as I was. He asked whether I wanted to do it, and I said if it would be helpful to him, yes. Of course, he gave me very little money. After all, I'm vice president of the company."

"Mike and I have been married for 34 years. I was married for a while to someone else, a charming man who is an antique dealer. We're still very friendly. Mike calls him his husband-in-law, and we visit him occasionally. Mike and I have two sons and a daughter — all married. I have three grandchildren, or is it four? I can't remember.

"While I was making the movie Mike didn't come to the set. I refused to let him. I didn't want the director to feel that I wanted to get extra close-ups or anything like that."

Miss Barnes has some strong opinions about movies today. She feels that the permissive films have about run their course and thinks that the public want to see more romantic kinds of films.

"I don't mean things like 'Love Story'," she explained. "That's the other extreme. But I mean films that really tell a romantic story about people. I think even young people want these kinds of films back again."

Will she make more films now?

Miss Barnes grinned at the thought of being asked. "Well, yes, if I find something that appeals to me." It was like old times.

Middleman in animal kingdom

By Dick Kleiner

HOLLYWOOD — Bill Burrud, the animal world's best friend, is still turning out his animal films. He sees himself in a unique spot in the animal kingdom.

"I'm not a scientist," he says. "I work closely with scientists, but I have no desire to do any serious work in the field.

"What I am is a middleman, halfway between the scientist and the animal behaviorists on one hand, and the lay public on the other. I'm still a showman."

His big show, "Animal World," is now being syndicated, and he says it now has a bigger impact than it had when it was a network feature. On the network, it was almost always on at 5:30 Sunday afternoons, pretty much a dead period. But, in syndication, it is often slotted in better spots, like in Chicago, where it currently leads in to "All In The Family."

Despite its current success, Burrud is planning on gradually changing it.

"I want to make it more of a Disney-type show," he says. "I want to get into the controlled action kind of series. I'm doing one now, a story of a baby burro. And we're planning one called 'Love, Animal Style,' which is all about the varying kinds of courtship practices in the animal kingdom.

He is very careful to point out that it won't be mating practices, just courtship practices. It's still a family show, and will continue to be that.

Burrud says he has to be very careful, with family-type entertainment, not to offend anybody. For example, if they do anything on primates, they can't even hint that man descended from the apes. If they do, they are flooded with protest mail from the Bible belt.

Burrud didn't start out as a great animal lover, but he says he has become one. He won't kill any, he says. But then he contradicts himself saying he does love to fish and go bird hunting. But he excuses that by saying that, although he cannot intellectually reconcile it in his own mind, he does adhere strictly to the laws. "I only catch enough to eat."

"But," he says, "I won't kill a fly. In fact, my wife gets very angry with me because I won't kill a fly."

He works carefully with scientists to make the shows as accurate as possible. He says scientists can be more difficult than movie stars.

"We had to rewrite the narration for one show four times," he says, "before this one particular scientist-expert was satisfied."

Pretentious Hook song hit for Mac

By Mary Campbell

"Baby, Don't Get Hooked on Me" is the only gold record by singer-song writer Mac Davis, who says, "Isn't that the most pretentious song title you've ever heard?"

"It started out as a joke. We were recording in Muscle Shoals, Ala., and my producer had been asking me to write a hook song. That's a song with a hook phrase that will reach out and grab you the first time you hear it. It's commercial — like 'I Believe in Music' — you remember it and you can sing it.

"So I said to him, 'Baby, baby, don't get hooked on me.' He said, 'I think that's a smash. Let's cut it.' I said, 'You got to be kidding. I ain't even wrote it.'

"We cut it two or three different ways. I made up skeleton chords and words. We cut basic tracks and I went back to the motel and sat up all night and wrote words down to it. I put my voice on to it before I left town.

"I said, 'Man, you're embarrassing me, putting that out. What are people going to think? John Wayne could say a thing like, 'Baby, don't get hooked on me.' I can't.

"I was male chauvinist pig of the month in some women's magazine. It could just as easily be sung by a girl, though. It's just another way of saying, 'Let's break up.' You know that line, 'I'm getting too serious,' that was the usual way out in high school."

Davis has cut three albums for Columbia, "Mac Davis, Song Painter," "I Believe in Music" and "Baby, Don't Get Hooked on Me."

Before that, he wrote songs for other people. Elvis Presley had gold records with "In the Ghetto" and "Don't Cry, Daddy," surprising Davis by cutting the latter, because it is strongly country flavored.

Gallery had a hit with "I Believe in Music," Kenny Rogers and the First Edition with "Something's Burning," and Bobby Goldsboro with "Watching Scotty Grow."

Davis first heard Elvis Presley when he was 15, in his native Lubbock, Tex., with Presley performing from a makeshift stage in an outdoor parking lot. "He probably got about $75 for it. He wiggled and shook and every kid in town was trying to do that and trying to grow sideburns and collars were turning up and shirts open down to here.

"I wrote all my songs for him when I first started. Getting them to him was impossible. I still feel, had some of them been recorded by him, they would have been hits. They wouldn't be today; they were strictly '50s."

Mac Davis

Davis says, "I started making up songs when I first learned to whistle. I was 4 years old and I could make up melodies. It was a gift. There wasn't any training and nobody in my family ever had any musical background. I thought my mother had the most beautiful voice in the world, though.

"I started putting words to them when I was about 16. My daddy, who was a carpenter, had made up poems as long as I could remember. He had funny business cards that rhymed. He still writes religious poems and sometimes gets one published. He'll send me a dozen copies of it. They're crude and beautiful.

"I had a friend who played guitar. I'd tell him what chords I thought sounded right. He'd hit it and I'd say, 'That's the one. Weld it. Solder it.' I'd have me a song written. That finally got to be a drag and I bought an old beat-up guitar and got to where I could play it. My guitar playing is still very limited. I play well enough to accompany myself.

"I paid $5 for that guitar, when I was 16. I cut my fingers to ribbons learning how to play it."

At 20, Davis went to work as district manager in Atlanta for Vee-Jay Records, later for Liberty. He was writing songs but his publisher didn't want anybody but one of his own artists to record any of them.

In 1966, Davis moved to Hollywood to head Liberty's publishing company. "My first break was when a fellow who was scoring a movie for Elvis asked if I'd like to write songs for the movie. He said Elvis hadn't had a hit single in ages and they were going to try to update his style. I wrote 'A Little Less Conversation' and 'Live a Little, Love a Little.' I wrote for several of his movies. His TV special came along and they asked if I'd write for that. I wrote 'Memories' and it turned out to be a big hit — my first big hit.

"Every time I knew he was going into a recording session I'd get a song or two ready and send them to him. I did that with 'In the Ghetto' and 'Don't Cry, Daddy.'

"I wrote 'Something's Burning' and 'Watching Scotty Grow' for myself but the producer on my first album wouldn't let me cut them. He didn't think they were me. We're still good friends but he's not my record producer any more. He didn't have that magic.

"Scotty is 9 and my son by a marriage before Sarah. He lives in Los Angeles. Most people think he is Bobby Goldsboro's son. Bobby asked if he could change it to 'Watching Danny Grow,' for his boy, and I said, 'Not on your life.'"

Davis doesn't like the identifying tag sometimes used to introduce him, "The song painter." He says, "I wrote a song for a Glen Campbell movie called, 'I'll Paint You a Song.' They asked people for quotes for my first album and Glen said, 'He doesn't write songs; he paints them.' Columbia made it the title of the album and it just stuck. But I tell them not to call me that on talk shows. I wish it would just go away and leave me alone."

Actor with capital A

By Joan Crosby

HOLLYWOOD — To all those viewers out there in televisionland, Ted Knight is the funny "Hi guys" guy who won a well-deserved Emmy Award for his portrayal of the egotistical and not-too-bright newscaster Ted Baxter on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show."

But to a lot of his fellow actors who know the range of his talent through his many appearances on the Los Angeles stage, Ted is an actor with a capital A.

Actor Harry Raybould, who played Abraham Lincoln to Ted's Douglas in "The Rivalry," a play about the Lincoln-Douglas debates, recalls the review that referred to Ted's "consummate artistry."

Because Ted would like to show his fans that he can be more than Ted Baxter, he is thinking of touring the summer stock circuit next summer in "The Rivalry" with Raybould who, Ted says "is the best Lincoln I have ever seen."

Meanwhile, this summer, unable to do a stock tour because "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" is now back in production, Ted has nevertheless been getting out and meeting the public. He's been Grand Marshal of the Dogwood Festival in Atlanta; he went to New York for talk show appearances; to Philadelphia to cohost on The Mike Douglas Show; to Denver, Dallas, Seattle, Memphis, Cape Girardeau (Mo.) for appearances and to Toronto for Film Festival awards.

When he isn't traveling, Ted is the proud father of Little League pitching great Eric Knight, 9. Ted says Eric's record proves he's a fine pitcher, if you prefer more than a father's word.

Since the Emmy, Ted has received enough requests for his time to occupy 24 hours a day.

"All celebrities are inundated with requests for personal objects — 'Please send us your left foot' — and benefits. All causes are worthwhile."

"As far as bad things — well, some call it senility but I call it an actor's memory. I forget the bad things."

As is befitting his new status, Ted has bought a new home in Pacific Palisades and is planing to move in possibly at a time which coincides with his 25th wedding anniversary to his wife, Dottie.

"A woman like Dottie is rare," he says, a note of wonder coming into his voice, "and I found her."

Save the Globe

American edges closer to his stubborn

By William Glover

LONDON (AP) — Sam Wanamaker pauses occasionally on his hectic rounds to check those clouds of debris dust swirling along a long-neglected stretch of London's waterfront.

For the American actor-director, every whack of the wrecking ball against crumbling warehouse walls means his stubborn dream edges a bit nearer reality.

"Within three years," he declared with confidence honed during many skirmishes with officialdom, "we will have the third Globe theater on the spot where Shakespeare's plays were first performed."

Although a slight matter of collecting all the million pounds sterling estimated for building remains to be resolved, the 54-year-old dynamo from Chicago points out that the project is at last receiving support from the powerful Arts Council of Great Britain.

"Until now," he explains, "it had been reluctant to give help because its major theatrical commitments are the National and Royal Shakespeare companies. For the first time it is guaranteeing against losses in any of our activities."

Besides planning to erect a replica of the famous Elizabethan arena, the Globe Playhouse Trust which Wanamaker organized three years ago envisions an elaborate complex of related theatrical activities, including a world center for Shakespearean research.

The first tangible tourist lures include a 700-seat tent wherein plays by Stratford's bard, his peers and such modern revisionists as Ionesco with "Macbett" are performed; a festival of relevant feature films, and a museum devoted to the arena's lusty history.

"Beginning with the Romans," says Wanamaker who has boned up on Bankside tradition with as much enthusiasm as he has unraveled the intricacies of local politics, "this was the place where respectable people from the other side of the Thames came for pleasure."

Available diversions of yore ranged from alehouses to brothels, from pits where bears and bulls battled ferocious dogs, to the temples of drama, which 16th century gentility regarded as pretty disreputable, too.

Appropriately enough, the spot where most authorities agree the original Globe burned in 1613 and where its replacement was torn down in 1644, has ever since been the site of a brewery.

In subsequent centuries, Dr. Samuel Johnson thundered his wisdom in the neighborhood, then Charles Dickens came along to write about Clink prison.

"I've always been in institutional theater," Wanamaker explains his interest in promoting "a great, marvelous civic amenity" on this side of the Atlantic.

While he was still studying at the Goodman Drama School in Chicago, summertime fairs both there and in Cleveland featured miniproductions of Shakespeare plays, performed in approximate copies of the Globe. Arthur Kennedy and David Wayne were among his fellow players.

The youthful experience was never forgotten through the next dozen years while Wanamaker developed a solid reputation on Broadway as both actor and director.

In 1952 he came to England in "Winter Journey" and has been here most of the time since. Between stage stints he has amassed a considerable film record in front of and behind the cameras.

One of his early pilgrimages was to the industrial-shipping area of East London where Shakespeare and his fellows had disbursed.

"I was appalled," he says, "because nothing had been done to preserve those landmarks. The contrast with interest in America in Shakespeare made me wonder."

As a crusader, the stocky, intense impresario occasionally voices sharp comments on the British.

"They take twice as long as they should to make up their minds about saving something of historic worth — and then regret it after it is gone." In afterthought, he admits: "I have a provocative nature, and I've stepped on a few toes trying to get things done."

Not surprisingly, Yankee drive, he is aware, has sometimes made Globe restoration more problematical than it might otherwise be.

"The majority of the press has been extremely hostile to this project," he asserts. "I think partly it is because a foreigner has usurped a role that should have been taken by a native.

Wanamaker first individual shrine to the English drama.

"Plans have been attempted for 70 years, but this was a commercial area."

"During the bombed The methods of facilities in the sole."

"I came back about three great scheme reconstruction quarter-mile Blackfriars area."

"I talked about my brother so strongly something you."

The necessity was added with film studio some product movies halted Wanamaker seven months.

"They agree to contract, but I another job fitted together."

Payola: Wheel of Fortune, part 1

Editor's Note: Payola is rearing its ugly head in the popular music business again, only this time there are incentives other than money to influence deejays. First of two parts.

By Jay Sharbutt

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Disc jockeys, catering to the insatiable American thirst for music, still swing to the tune of payola, many music industry sources admit, despite the fact that taking it could mean a $10,000 fine and a year in jail.

It is impossible to say how widespread the payola is, perhaps because few people know. And those who promote records and music groups should know, but they aren't talking, at least not specifically.

Payola is when you give money, favors, girls, even drugs, to disc jockeys, to induce them to play particular records or plug particular musical groups. Money was the prime inducement in the late 1950s when some 200 disc jockeys were accused of accepting graft, and a congressional probe led to the present federal law and penalties in 1960.

The record industry was small potatoes then compared to now. A Forbes Magazine estimate says it took in a whopping $2 billion last year in record and tape sales. The take was fueled primarily by teenagers and young adults who were toddlers when "payola" was a big, new story.

It's an old tale now, but with a new twist — "drugola," or the use of grass — marijuana — or coke — cocaine — as an inducement to disc jockeys. But then there's the use of drugs within the music business itself.

"I think the dirty word here is not payola," says one top record company executive. "I think the dirty word here is drugs. Drugs are a serious problem within the industry and I think there's been a lax attitude taken by the presidents of companies."

The president of another major company disagrees: "I don't think there's any more drug use in our industry than in any other."

This year, as the industry continues to make millions and music, music, music, it also complains loudly about allegations, allegations, allegations that stem from a federal grand jury probe of the business.

Since April, the grand jury, meeting Newark, N.J., has been hearing testimony concerning traditional kinds of payola, drugola and the extent of mob influence in the record industry.

No indictments have been returned yet and Justice Department sources say it may be a year before anything happens. But some record executives fear the probe, coupled with other official and unofficial investigations and subsequent headlines could well:

—Bring down a federal regulatory hammer that would sharply limit the free-wheeling, free-spending ways now existing in the business.

—Jeopardize the already-shaky chances of a proposed copyright revision bill now in Congress. The measure has died in past years after heavy pressure from broadcasters opposing certain provisions it again contains this, year.

The provisions would tighten laws against record piracy — the re-recording of pop albums and their resale at cut rates; require for the first time royalty payments from jukebox owners, and provide for an estimated $20 million in annual royalties from broadcasters.

The record industry's worries are shared by conglomerates that own both recording and broadcasting companies; among them are the CBS, NBC and ABC networks, which own 15 television and 38 radio stations between them.

Profitable broadcast licenses could be affected at renewal time if allegations of wrongdoing by companies' record divisions are proved.

How widespread are drugola and payola and who is involved? Impossible to say. Music industry members contacted during a three-week AP survey — a-flatly refused to talk; b-refused to talk in specifics, or c-simply insisted they didn't know.

Those who would talk would do so only if promised neither their names nor those of their companies would be used. Ironically, the industry that thrives on publicity, has the heat is on.

Most of the drugola is a cash, direct king, even broadcasting federal crime.

With $75,000 of his own funds, Wanamaker bought the property where chained bears had once fought fierce mastiffs for survival." He opened the present museum, and enlisted an impressive committee to sponsor the Globe Playhouse Trust, and to raise funds.

Ever since the theatrical-recreational enterprise has been jousting with real estate interests which envision a waterfront of high-rise apartment house and office buildings.

Sundry municipal authorities finally came around to a compromise devised to include public park and entertainment facilities. A site has been tentatively proposed for the third Globe not far from the original locale.

No one knows just what the first Globe looked like inside because the only drawing that has survived the centuries was of another Elizabethan playhouse, The Swan.

"Shakespeare played in it, too," Wanamaker adds another bit of incidental intelligence. Then with a gleam in his eye, he says:

"As a matter of fact there were five theaters in this neighborhood. Perhaps some day ..."

If Sam Wanamaker, pictured here, has his way, within three years the site of Shakespeare's original Globe Playhouse on London's waterfront will be marked by more than just this plaque. The American actor-director is the originator of the Globe Playhouse Trust, a project whose plans include building a replica of the theater on the long-neglected site, together with an elaborate complex of related theatrical activities.

A promotion man at a major record company in Los Angeles says it another way: "Life styles have changed and drugs are now what booze was in the Fifties. It's that simple.

"Okay if a jock is into grass or coke, a promotion guy might do a number with him. But only to stay tight with him. It's not given as a bribe, as a 'play this and I'll give you great grass thing.'

"It's offered on a personal, social basis, pretty much the way you'd go have a drink with a business contact."

Drugs are part of the scene.

He and other middle-level sources in the industry say the same relationship exists between rock stars who use drugs and many of the record company "artists relations" men that must deal with them.

They say the performers who use drugs — and none put marijuana smoking in the drug use category — buy the stuff themselves or get them from the "groupies" who are part of their regular entourage.

They say there are infrequent occasions when performers will ask their artist relations man to buy them drugs.

One former artist relations man for a major New York label says when this happens "and if the guy is open to it, he'll pick up the tab.

"And generally, the president of the company or whoever is okaying the expense account — if the artist is hitting — will go along with it.

"There's a tacit understanding or agreement, of, 'okay, that's what you did. Just don't go crazy with it.' And there are cases where a company president either honestly doesn't know what his men are doing or simply doesn't want to know."

But drugs are rarely an inducement to hire or keep top pop talent, he said. They want money, not drugs.

Most agreed that the main targets of company's promotional push — legitimate and otherwise — are the stations playing the top 40 pop or rhythm and blues records as listed in the popularity charts of major music publications or independent "tip sheets."

Most agreed that the "majors" — top independent or network-owned stations, particularly in New York and Los Angeles, are virtually impossible to crack with payola, primarily because of management controls stemming from the earlier scandals. Also these are the home stations for top disc jockeys—men who earn up to

"... there are cases where a company president either honestly doesn't know ... or simply doesn't want to know."

$100,000 plus, a year.

Most payola efforts, they say, center on stations surrounding major metropolitan areas. The idea is to get heavy air play on those stations, hoping the record will "break out" and hit the charts.

They say payola takes a variety of forms other than outright cash. It includes airline tickets that can be cashed in; credit cards given deejays or program directors with the understanding they'll be returned within a given time and free trips to regional and national conventions with all expenses paid including the services of prostitutes.

Some companies give free record albums — figures range from 50 to 500 and up — which the recipients resell to record stores at cut rates of $1 or $2 each and pocket the proceeds.

Another dodge, sources say, is for a disc jockey to organize a pop music concert. A record company supplies its stars at prices well below what the performers usually get for personal appearances. The disc jockey pockets the salary difference.

One practice that doesn't involve payola to broadcasters is called "store payola." It's used in areas where top 40 stations base the play lists in part on what albums are selling in major record stores.

Store officials get free records, which they can sell without paying the record companies involved. In return, they falsely report that certain records are selling well when radio stations call up.

"Do that in four or five of your big stores and you don't have to get involved with the stations," says a Los Angeles radio executive. "The fewer stores surveyed, the more it's worth."

Concluded next week.

Sane or not?

"Aladdin Sane"
David Bowie
RCA Victor LSP-4852

Among the ever-increasing number of performers making a blatant appeal to the gay crowd, David Bowie is the most prominent. Ever since his first album, the cover of which showed David done up as Greta Garbo, Bowie has been a darling of the homosexual crowd. An exotic, bizarre stage act has helped, too.

Tons of publicity have aided Bowie's desire to be well-known, but in the end it has to be his music which will determine whether he becomes the superstar his hard-core, though small, group of loyal followers insist he already is. Despite the acclaim his "Ziggy Stardust" lp received and the brisk sales of this album, I still see little evidence that Bowie has or will contribute anything lasting to contemporary music.

He is a skilled tactician, true, and a fair craftsman, but an important artist, no.

The major shortcoming of David's music is its unnecessary busyness and a nearly constant frantic level which, if controlled properly, would be effective, but as presented here is counterproductive. The sound becomes redundant.

As an author, Bowie writes dull music. Nothing on "Aladdin Sane" comes even remotely close to the quality of the only borrowed song, the Stones' "Let's Spend the Night Together," which David transforms into a gay number. It is the most effective number on this album, and probably the best he's ever done, even though it's light years away from the original's quality.

Bowie explores sanity this time, which has led the publicity oriented toward whether he is. He's sane, all right. And smart

Sour turns sweet

HOLLYWOOD — Real, dedicated television fans may have wondered what ever happened to Tim Considine. This is by nature of a progress report on Tim. The prognosis is good.

Tim Considine was one of the original Douglas boys on Fred MacMurray's series "My Three Sons." He played Mike on that show for five years. Then he got bored. He liked the people he worked with but he simply got tired of doing the same thing, year in, year out.

The show let him out. He says his character was written out in one sentence. The Fred MacMurray part simply said to him, "Well, Mike, now you're married and off to teach in Florida." He smiled and was gone.

For a long time after that, Tim was soured on acting. He dabbled in many things. He wrote, he produced, he directed. He drove race cars. He went down the Colorado River rapids. ("That changed my life. My whole perspective.") He became a photographer. He tried his hands and brain at several other things.

"Lately, however," he says, "I've been interested in acting again. I can't explain it. It's just the way things happen with a man."

So now, looking a lot like Roddy McDowall and sporting a mustache, he's back in the acting business. He has a good part in "The Daring Dobermans," the sequel to "The Doberman Gang," and he's casting about for other jobs. Acting is fun these days.

Trying to explain his resurgence of interest in acting, he thinks maybe his age may be the key. He's 32 now — hard to believe, but true — and he thinks it's entirely possible his change of heart may be due to that troublesome thing, maturity. He was 11 when he started his career.

Like many of us he says he wishes he could go back to being 11 again. It's not that he'd change anything he's done, "but I'd love to be able to start over at 11 again, providing I'd know what I know now."

Being a veteran of more than 20 years in show business, at 32,2 makes for some funny moments. At one point in his career, he appeared in several of the Mickey Mouse Club serials, such as "Spin and Marty."

Not long ago he was at a party and happened on a lovely, sophisticated woman. She gave him a big, friendly smile.

"Tim!" she said. "Don't you remember me? I'm Mouseketeer Betty!"

as hell, too. Any performer who can go as far as Bowie has on average talents is no dummy.

As an afterthought, I wonder why Bowie's music gets no airplay on the weekly Gay Liberation radio program on KSAN, San Francisco. I heard three programs Sunday mornings recently, and at least three fourths of the music played was by Paul Simon.

"Fresh"
Sly and the Family Stone
Epic KE 32134

It seems that in the past two weeks, all I've done is complain about how I don't like certain very popular performers, so I may as well be consistent and say Sly has always bored me to death. Add to my general dislike of his music a two-hour wait three years ago when he was late for a concert, you may understand why Sly is not on my best liked list.

"Fresh" is not really. It is the same old Sly. It takes more than doing an old standard like "Que Sera, Sera" to project a new image.

On the entire album, there is one cut I like. "If It Were Left Up to Me" is catchy and features the familiar pumping Sly rhythm at its best. And Sly doesn't even sing on it.

"I'll never forget the sound of the Double Advent Speaker System at DEAN'S AUDIO BOUTIQUE, 530 W. College . . . 530 W. College . . . I forgot the address!"

'Diana' in trouble already

Diana Rigg's upcoming NBC show, "Diana," is another that's reportedly in trouble even before it gets on the air. I hear they're burning the midnight oil trying to salvage it and that the entire concept of the show may yet be changed.

Harvey Korman is in Natchez, Miss., playing a key role in the new movie version of "Huckleberry Finn." He'll have to stay there so long that he will miss the first "Carol Burnett Show" of the season. It will be the only show he's missed in the six years the program has been on the air.

You never know what will hold up production. ABC's new series, "Toma," was set to begin — cast, crew, director, everybody was ready. But they had to postpone the opening of filming for a few days — because the mimeograph department couldn't get the scripts ready in time.

Dan Dailey is starting a new series — "Faraday and Company," for NBC — but he professes to be lazy.

"The older I get," Dailey says, "the more convinced I am of an everlasting truth — I hate working. I'd rather just sit on the beach."

Michael Landon has sold a story to "Love Story," the new anthology produced by George Schaefer, which will be on NBC TV this season. He'll be directing it.

Frances Reid of NBC-TV's "Days of Our Lives" is an avid gardener. But she admits the great California weather has defeated her. "It finally got to the point," she said, "where I pretend some of the year is winter. Otherwise I end up gardening 12 months of the year."

Dean Martin, as is reasonably well known, hates to rehearse. So everything around his show is on cue cards. Carol Channing swears that when she was a guest on the show, she stubbed her toe and suddenly saw a cue card appear. It said, "Ouch."

Bob Hope spends a lot of time these days answering questions about the fire which destroyed his nearly completed dream home in Palm Springs. He says he is grateful that no one was hurt and that the fire was this year "instead of next year, when the house would have been finished."

Then he reverts to the Hope we know and love by saying it was hard reaching the Palm Springs Fire Department "because they have an unlisted number. Also, they had four more holes to play." He adds that his friends helped. "Dean Martin came by and threw a Martini on the fire and Bing Crosby flew down to throw a glass of orange juice. Lassie also helped."

Dick Cavett says even he gets confused by ABC's late night programming, "I'm either Dick Cavett or Jac Paar, but I can't keep it straight either."

Loretta Swit, who is of Polish descent, has received a lot of favorable mail from her recent anti-Polish joke stand on "The Merv Griffin Show." She even got a citation from a Polish organization in Chicago.

Bob Denver, who will be back on TV this fall in "Dusty's Trail," a syndicated series, is teaming with folk singer Hoyt Axton to write a children's TV special called "The Happy Song." Axton is writing nine songs for the show.

Glad You Asked That! By Marilyn & Hy Gardner

Why no film?

Q: What's the real reason Sonny and Cher haven't made a movie?—P. Wakefield, Baltimore.

A: "Films are our last hurdle," explains Sonny. "So I want to be sure of the project before we say okay." The project most interesting to them at the moment is a musical version of the "Dick Tracy" comic strip.

Q: I once heard that Ryan O'Neal was ashamed of the first few films he ever made. Why? Were they X-rated? —Mrs. Elliot R., Pittsburgh.

A: No. They were Army propaganda films he made a dozen years ago, urging kids to join up. "There was no war then," Ryan wryly recalls, "no Vietnam. But in retrospect I'm ashamed of myself for doing these industrial films and getting paid $100 a day. It wasn't worth it!"

Q: With all the advice President Nixon gave football coaches last year—I'm curious. Did he ever play football in college?—T. Mussman, Brooklyn.

A: Yes. But "short on ability and long on guts," is the way Whittier classmates remember Nixon. Even though he was seldom called in to play, he remained on the team. And his coach, full-blooded Indian Wallace (Chief) Newman, recalled the young man was wonderful for morale. "He'd sit there and cheer the rest of the guys, and it isn't easy to ride the bench for four years cheering the other guy." One classman, a lineman who didn't dig Dick, once said: "Whenever he went in, I always got the five-yard penalty marker. Because Dick was so eager I knew he'd be off-side just about every play."

Q: I understand that there's an unusual inscription over Robert Taylor's last resting place — which I'd like to visit. Can you tell me what it says and where it's located? —Mrs. Susanne R., Phoenix, Ariz.

A: Embedded within the private walls of the Court of Freedom at Forest Lawn in Glendale, Cal., is a green and gold plaque marking where Bob's ashes are inurned. It simply reads: "ROBERT TAYLOR 1911-1969 AND A LIFETIME TO GO." Since one must have a key to the Columbarium of the Evening Star, located in the Garden of Honor, only the family may visit.

Natural for Coco

By Edgar Penton

After more than 20 years of hard work in summer stock, regional theater, off-Broadway and way-off-Broadway, James Coco is being "discovered" by America.

Starring in the new comedy series "Calucci's Dept.," bowing this fall on Fridays, CBS-TV, will perhaps bring Coco wider recognition than he had had in a quarter-century of acting.

"This part," says Coco, "is a natural progression for me after years in the theater, then movies and television guest appearances."

As Joe Calucci, the beleaguered supervisor of a frustratingly inefficient state unemployment office, James Coco may at last become a household name.

"Calucci will be a great role for me," Coco says, "He says the most startling honest things, and he's entirely believable — which is the whole secret of comedy."

"You could say I've done a lot of 'research' for this role, too," Coco sighs, "I've spent a lot of time in unemployment lines myself."

While he appeared in over 100 plays in the first 20 years of his acting career, many of those engagements were victims of the notoriously high mortality rate for theater productions.

"We'd spend three or four weeks rehearsing a show," he recalls, "then I'd be looking for work again after a three- or four-night run."

With these experiences behind him, numerous awards for his theater work, two years on Broadway as star of "Last of the Red Hot Lovers," and his motion picture roles, Coco has certainly worked for his relatively recent popularity.

James Coco grew up in the Bronx, N.Y., the son of an Italian shoemaker. "I spent half my childhood shining shoes," he reminisces, "We were really poor, but my mother would take me to the movies and we would sit through the same show over and over. I decided about then to become an actor because, well," he shrugs, "I knew I didn't want to make shoes."

"When I was 17, I got a job as stage manager of a children's theater touring the country in a passenger car and a red truck, doing all the classic children's plays."

"About 10 minutes before the curtain went up, I'd be trying to get Snow White on her feet and yelling for the dwarves, 'Sleepy! Grumpy! Dopey!'" Coco grins. "I really earned my salary on that one."

From there on it was uphill all the way for Coco as he began taking acting lessons and working in summer stock, where his hefty frame and mobile face brought him countless character roles, especially in comedy.

In his own estimation, things really started looking up only years later because of his starring performance in Terance McNally's play "Next," directed by Elaine May.

From this off-Broadway success, it was a short hop to Neil Simon's Broadway smash hit "Last of the Red Hot Lovers," which ran for two years and garnered a Tony Award nomination for Coco.

Offers began rolling in for guest star roles in television, including "Marcus Welby, M.D.," "The Flip Wilson Show" and numerous appearances on "The Tonight Show" with Johnny Carson and "The Mike Douglas Show."

In the past few years, Coco has starred in several major motion pictures, including "Tell Me That You Love Me, Junie Moon" with Liza Minelli, "Such Good Friends" with Dyann Cannon, and the current film with Peter O'Toole and Sophia Loren, "Man of La Mancha."

"I was really too tall to play Sancho Panza," 6-foot Coco says.

"He's supposed to be very short, but Peter is about 8 feet tall, so it worked out well."

After eight months on location in Italy making the picture, Coco speaks glowingly of Sophia Loren. "A lusty, wonderful woman," he commented admiringly, "and a good poker player besides."

Coco has been hard at work on "Calucci's Dept." for CBS this fall. The series was created by Renee Taylor and Joe Bologna, who had Coco in mind for the starring role from the beginning.

The series, produced by Bob Precht for Sullivan Productions, is being taped in New York City before a live audience. Most network programs are produced in Hollywood, but Coco prefers his home city.

"I'm thrilled we'll be working here," he says, "I love New York, and since we'll have a live audience, it will be the best of both worlds for me — theater and television."

"A live audience," Coco says, "responds to me, and I can play to that reaction. That relationship with the audience is important to me, especially in comedy."

After all those years, how does it feel to finally be a star? Coco looks puzzled, "Star?" I don't know what that means," he grins, "but I know that the successes have made life a lot more comfortable for me."

Coco's unemployment line now forms on the set of "Calucci's Dept.," where the star of the show has a lot of experience under his ample belt.

The greatest fireworks freak

By John Miner

of The Post-Crescent staff

Not that I've ever made the slightest effort to research the subject, but I badly miss my guess if there was not a series of spectacular explosions and house fires in London about 1635.

In my possession is a curious little book written 338 years ago by one John Bate of that city, a gentleman who surely ranks as one of the great fireworks freaks of the 17th century and perhaps of all recorded history.

Not even my own step-grandfather, who used to go stark nuts buying firecrackers and Roman candles every Fourth of July during my childhood, seems to have been in Bate's league when it came to a passion for the big bang.

A most inquisitive investigator of how the things of his day worked, Bate covers many learned subjects in his tome, which he called "A Book of Instructions." But I find him at the top of his form with the chapter in which he undertakes to teach "most plainly, and withall, most exactly, the composing of all manner of "Fire-workes for Tryumph and Recreation."

One may only suppose that it was the merciful hand of Providence which restrained English boys, armed both with Bate's book and a goodly supply of the necessary chemicals, from setting all of Britain aflame.

Bate demonstrates a keen understanding of the use of the crude black powder of the period.

"Gun-powder inclosed in the barrell of a gun, being rarified by fire applyed unto the touch-hole," he notes, "seeketh a greater quantity of roome, and therefore forceth the bullet out of the barrell. This is called violent motion." It certainly is!

You'll know you have good gunpowder if "being fired, it flash quickly, and leave no dregs or setlings behinde it."

That said, the author tells us that "fireworks are are of three sorts: Such as operate in the ayre, such as operate upon the earth and such as burn in or on the water."

Nor does Mr. Bate forget to inventory for his readers the things they'll need to make their fireworks:

"Severall sorts of ingredients . . . ought to be had in readiness: Chiefly saltpeter, rockpeter, sulpher, charcoals, good gunpowder, filings of steele, oyle of peter and spirit of wine."

He dares us to chuck in a bit of brimstone. "The best brimstone is quick brimstone of live sulphur. . . if this cannot be gotten, take of the whitest yellow brimstone."

There are many, many formulas for fireworks "according unto the prescription of the noted professors, as Mr. Malthus, Mr. Norton and the French Authour, Des Recreations Mathematiques." One will suffice:

"Take of saltpeter one pound," says Mr. Bate, "brimstone halfe a pound, gunpowder halfe a pound, charcoale two ounces. This composition will make . . . rockets appeare with a great fiery taile." I'll bet it would at that!

Going crazy altogether, the author adds to his explosive brews such things—readily available, I take it, at ye olde 17 century apothecary's shoppe—as "white frankincense, quicklime, bitumen, camphor, linseed oyle, oyle of yolks of eggs, liquid varnish and red wine."

I sure don't need a PhD in chemistry to figure out what's going to happen if I put a match to that lot!

Still, Mr. Bate does give some passing thought to the safety of his readers:

"Take this from me, whosoever thou art that desirest to be instructed. Never relie absolutely upon a composition, nor make many rockets, or other sorts of fire-workes. . . untill such time as thou has made triall once or twice of the same, least that thou misse of they aime. . ."

In other words, have a care! Goeth a little easy on ye amounts of ye gunpowder, quicklime, brimstone and liquid varnish to the end that thou shalt not blow thy head off or put out they lights!

Bate's "Book of Instructions," to which I may return in some subsequent column, dealeth also with building waterworks, small do-it-yourself household projects, drawing and painting pictures, and the preparation of what the author terms "divers excellent and approvee medicines for severall maladies."

Among his remedies are, for example, a treatment "for the biting of a mad dogge." And what went into the ingenious Mr. Bate's "jelly for one that is in a Consumption, or troubled with a loosenesse" is enough to make a coyote gag.

A monarch caterpillar, above, striped with white, black, blue and chartreuse, feeds on a milkweed leaf provided by Judith Thalhofer of Oshkosh. Miss Thalhofer, below, gently lifts a caterpillar from a leaf and will take it indoors to grow in safety before it becomes an orange-brown and black butterfly.

OSHKOSH— "I just want to increase the butterfly population," Judith Thalhofer said of the some 150 monarchs she is hatching at home.

One morning recently there were 13 drying out on the family rubber plant and clinging to the lace curtain in the bow window of her home at 686 Franklin St.

That was the biggest hatch so far this season, but 60 already had been released and more were coming.

"You can't tell exactly when. I think it depends on the temperature to some extent, and I expect there may be some genetic differences, too."

Judith said she has been helping the monarch butterfly population off and on for a number of years, depending on how many found their way to the milkweed patch she grows for them in her back yard. Indiscriminate use of pesticides by the city and home gardeners a few years ago, she suspects, accounted for the sparse monarch population at that time.

Milkweed leaves nourish the monarch larva, eventually handsomely striped blue, white, black and chartreuse caterpillars. Eggs are laid handily usually on the underside of milkweed leaves or in the blossoms, and Judith keeps a sharp eye out for the hatching.

Wasps are the natural enemies of the monarch caterpillar, she explained. They sting and paralyze them and carry them off to feed baby wasps.

The trick is to beat the wasps and the birds and other insects to the baby caterpillars. Judith takes them indoors when they are about a quarter-inch long and feeds them milkweed leaves. They thrive in any well ventilated container and a glass jar gives a clear view of their interesting performance.

The tiny caterpillar molts his skin as it grows. Judith keeps track of the smallest ones in a baby food jar nursery.

In several weeks, the caterpillar, now about an inch and a half long, is ready to attach his rear to a sticky wad of web and hang upside down, "J" shaped, with its head tucked in. A few hours of that exercise and it straightens, splits his skin for the last time and reveals the chrysalis underneath.

"It is mint green with touches of gold filagree," Judith described. The caterpillar settles into it, drawing it up into an inch-long pendant that hardens.

Later, the chrysalis looks darker, turning to dark-green as the skin becomes transparent and the monarch is about to emerge as a wet and scaly object. In 10 to 20 minutes, the glory of orange-brown wings takes shape, smartly veined and bordered in black. Several hours later, the wings are hardened, and the monarch is eager to flutter off on the life work of a butterfly and preparation for eventual migration when cold weather threatens.

Lucas really, one is injured, Judith said. She "put a kind of band-aid" on one torn wing and later saw the butterfly depositing eggs on a milkweed leaf in the yard.

She has fed diluted honey, sugar syrup or molasses by eye dropper to several who weren't as perky as "normal."

Monarch butterflies live on nectar from the flowers they pollinate, Judith said. Nobody seems to know how long they live or how far they fly except that they have made Pacific Grove on California's Monterey Peninsula famous by gathering there in clouds every year.

A geographer, Judith said she had an undergraduate major in biology, but she isn't doing any research with the monarchs.

"It's just for fun and to have more butterflies to look at," she said.

The South Greenville Grange

Taken from a 1928 brochure about the South Greenville Grange, the drawing, upper left shows the log Congress Hall where the Grange organized in 1873. The hall was built and used by German settlers in the area. The map indicates the location of today's Grange building when U.S. 45 was State Highway 26 as marked (State Trunk Highway 26 with Federal Highway 10 crossing it north of the Grange.) Below, the property is shown with its extensive horse barns at the right, then without them when they were in the way of the new highway construction. The pamphlet was published to promote community-wide interest in a fund drive to build the present structure. (From Grange archives)

South Greenville Grange, No. 225, has an illustrious history which parallels the century-old Grange movement in the United States. This rural, fraternal organization opens its 100th anniversary year today in its familiar landmark hall on U.S. 45 at Outagamie-Winnebago County Trunk BB.

Historically Speaking by Lillian Mackesy

Most people recognize the Grange name as an important, far-reaching movement that swept across the country in an amazing burst of popularity. It was a movement that was at once political, economic, social and cultural in scope; what's more, it really worked. Few people, however, remember the movement by its proper name of Order of Patrons of Husbandry to designate its connection with rural America.

Although South Greenville Grange was the 225th in line for a charter in Wisconsin, today it represents the oldest grange in the state. Most of the others were shortlived, a few kept going for many years but only South Greenville has made it from its first meetings without a break in program, with support to the national movement and its members staunchly loyal. This is why members of many rural Outagamie families today count their South Greenville Grange membership by generations—the Julius family, the descendants of John Pingel, Seth Perry, George R. Schaefer. Grange records show 30 charter names on the original application for organization: William Schmidt, Ed. Maap, R. Schmidt, A. Maap, G. Sevelbbsen, S. Sevelbbsen, C. Kaphingst, S. Kaphingst, C. Schultz, H. Schultz, Betsey Strong, John Pringle, D. Pringle, Fred Walter, H. Walter, W.B. Schmidt, D. Schmidt, A. Westphal, John Menning, John Kaphingst, Mary Kaphingst, Cyrus Strong, Christ Zachow, Seth J. Perry, Abbey Perry, Kitty Perry, Lucinda S. Crowell, Henry Withnell, Fred Wismer and Carl Morehward. The application was signed by National Grange Secretary Oliver Hudson Kelley over the official signature of National Grange Master Dudley W. Adams. The date was Oct. 27, 1873.

It may be noted that the names of women appear in the charter list. The Grange was organized with equal rights for men and women; it was the first national organization to start on the premise and to ensure the dignity of women members, the specific offices of Ceres, Pomona and Flora were to be and still are held only by women members.

Newspapers of the 1872-1873 organization period of the National Grange movement indicate both the need and widespread popularity of the Grange idea. Some papers were blunt in their appraisal, such as The Crescent at Appleton in its Feb. 7, 1874 issue.

"Why Should the Grange Be Instituted?" queried the headline, with the following answer: "Were legislators honest of purpose, legislating for the good of all, the farmer in a great Republic like this, whose domain consists of farm lands and pastures which represent untold millions of latent wealth, would never be called upon to fight an army of speculative corruption. But there is no other method of correcting the evil."

A more informative essay on the meaning and purpose of the grange was reprinted earlier that same year (1874) in the Crescent. It came from the magazine Colman's Rural World. "Nothing has ever been developed that is doing so much good for the farming community as the grange. They (the local granges) bring into activity all the latent powers of the farmer," the article concluded. "He has been asleep. He is now awake, resolute, strong, and firm for the right and true, wherever it may be found."

The writer pointed out that farmers, who were comparatively isolated before the grange, now were becoming different men. So were their wives and children changing for the better. "They bury the partisan, sectarian, and other prejudices that have heretofore made them strangers, and almost enemies. They meet one another as friends and brothers, and talk over their matters, their hopes and prospects, in the most confidential manner. They talk more than formerly, read more, think more. They learn that it is necessary to cultivate their brains as well as their crops."

Something for everybody in the budget

BY JOHN WYNGAARD
Post-Crescent staff writer

MADISON — The new state budget touches virtually all bases in the tax concessions that incumbent politicians will talk about on the campaign block next year. Property taxpayers, on the whole, will gain, as will all forms of business enterprises from the manufacturing corporation to the corner store proprietor and elderly persons of modest means will have the most liberal property tax (or rental) credits provided anywhere in the country.

Consumers have at long last been relieved of the irritant margarine tax. The reduction in inheritance and gift taxes, where spouses are involved, is the most important one in the history of that levy.

Even the personal income taxpayer, although his total liability will increase as inflation continues, has been handed a small favor in an advance of the personal exemption credit from $15 to $20 for each taxpayer, spouse and dependent. The increase will be to $25 for any taxpayer or spouse 65 years of age and over. The new credit of $20 is the equivalent of an exemption of $645 for persons with taxable income of $1,000 or less. For a family of four, the result will be that income tax liability will begin at a taxable income of $3,717, or nearly $600 higher than under the former rule.

Among major revenue sources for general purposes, the only major levy left untouched was the booming four per cent general sales tax.

Historically, state administrations have relied heavily upon the University of Wisconsin faculty when they wanted expert counsel in the management of state problems. In earlier decades of the century, that tendency was known as the "Wisconsin Idea."

Lately though, governors have turned to the private higher education sectors for more help, especially on sensitive issues in which it may be presumed that the state system of higher education could not be gracefully involved.

A decade ago, President Miller Upton, of Beloit College, headed the pathfinder citizens commission that led to the most important movement for state tax reforms in modern times—Four years ago, Curtis Tarr, then president of Lawrence University, Appleton, led an imaginative and courageous commission on state and local government organization improvements, which produced a comprehensive report, the seeds of which will sprout as time passes.

Now Gov. Lucey has turned to another Lawrence president, Thomas Smith, for what may be the most sensitive and difficult assignment a citizen could undertake, the presiding seat of the new state ethics commission, in its own way another pathfinding achievement.

Earlier this year, the legislature tangled fiercely on the idea of protecting scenic and other land resources of the state from raids by speculators. This was done by way of a constitutional amendment to encourage farmers to retain their holdings through a favorable tax classification for such lands. It encountered heavy weather, but sponsors remain hopeful that they can push the idea.

The original proposal encountered heavy opposition for two reasons: it required a constitutional amendment and there were genuine doubts it would be effective.

The problem has led to action elsewhere in the country. Vermont, for example, has attacked it simply and directly, through a deliberately discouraging capital gains tax on land transfers, with the rate determined by the length of time the land is held by the owner and the per cent of gain. It ranges downward from 60 per cent, when the land transferred is held for less than a year and the gain is 200 per cent or more.

So profusely is the new state budget sprinkled with novel policies and long-argued objectives that some of them that represent significant victories — or reverses — for important interests have been scarcely noted.

An illustration is the issue of municipal service costs associated with the location of major state facilities, as in police, fire and other programs that press burdensomely on local taxpayers.

For the first time, the state will compensate cities and other locations for such outlays, including garbage and trash disposal and collection not otherwise charged for. The legislature actually approved that long-standing goal of the League of Wisconsin Municipalities two years ago, but Gov. Lucey arranged to defer the liability because of a more sensitive treasury situation. The gain for localities will be at least $6,500,000 a year.

Newly expanded bonding authority for the state Department of Natural Resources pushed the authorized total close to the limit set in the bond referendum approval several years ago.

With an additional authorization of $50,000,000 for water pollution abatement and $12,000,000 for recreational facilities, the total of legislatively authorized borrowing by the department is slightly more than $184 million. The limit is $200 million.

The new state law that imposes local government cost and tax controls for next year, except as they may be vetoed in a referendum of the voters of any locality, has been credited to Gov. Lucey, who wants to be sure that additional money channelled into local treasuries will be used to hold down local levies and reduce them in many cases.

Actually, the first push for such a break for the municipalities came a year ago from leaders of local taxpayers groups associated with the Public Expenditure Survey, which said the concept is used in other states. The Lucey break is only for one year. The survey and its affiliates want such a provision for a referendum veto of local tax advances as a permanent fixture of the law.

The program of the annual Wisconsin Judicial College sessions in Madison included a lecture by Judge William E. Crane, Oshkosh, entitled "Problems in Becoming a Judge."

The judge could have looked around the hall and remarked that one of the major problems can be overcome by knowing a governor well. Because judicial terms are comparatively long and most men have attained middle age before they ascend the bench, the appointment process is almost as important as the election method in judicial recruitment in Wisconsin.

Old friends and political associates who were aware of the former governor's love of children will be pleased to know that U.S. Judge John W. Reynolds of Milwaukee and his wife, Jane, are the proud parents of newly arrived twin sons.

Their arrival expands the Reynolds family to six children, including three adopted during his marriage to his first wife, now deceased.

The requirements for financial disclosure by legislators and other state officials in the new code of ethics written into Wisconsin law has probably caused more animated controversy among politicians than any other state political event lately.

What has not been generally understood is that the disclosure provisions apply also to the members of the new state ethics board that will scrutinize the returns of others and judge them with respect to their disclosures of possible conflicts of interest by public officials.

Perhaps most people will affirm the judgement that would surely have been made by the late, great and sometimes ungrammatical Roundy Coughlin, the celebrated "Sage of Mendota."

"What more could be fairer?" he would have asked.

Not generally known is the fact that Atty. Gen. Robert Warren, Republican, of Wisconsin, and Sen. Walter Mondale of Minnesota, Democrat, are old friends. They became acquainted when they attended Macalester College, St. Paul, a quarter of a century ago. They were once roommates. Warren and Mondale now occasionally visit and resume the philosophical arguments on political questions they enjoyed as college boys.

Greenville Grange . . .

The author pointed out that the belief was widespread that the interest of one farmer was for the interest of others and that mutual cooperation was to the benefit of all in the advancement of their shared interests as well as a protection. "Knowing they have the controlling numbers in their county, state and nation," he said in acknowledgement of the vast agricultural quality of the times, "they feel that they are masters of the situation if they act with wisdom.

"They turn out in larger numbers to listen to speeches upon questions in which their interests are involved, not to believe and swallow all that may be uttered, but to carefully weigh and consider it, rejecting what may be false, and holding fast that which is true. They regularly attend their granges and enjoy these fraternal visits. They feel that by every such attendance they are benefited socially, morally, and intellectually. They take their wives and daughters with them to these meetings, that they may listen to the lessons set before them, hear discussions on subjects of interest, and thus derive the same advantages that they do themselves."

In those days the national grange worked hard for the establishment of a department of agriculture in the federal structure, rural free mail service, parcel post service, women's suffrage, national aid to good roads, the establishment of agricultural colleges, experimental stations and the enactment of pure food and dairy laws. The South Greenville Grange was a part of all this. Like most of the other granges across the land, the South Greenville Grange established a store in which member families could buy their groceries, farm supplies, nursery stock and feed at reasonable cost.

This venture into cooperative buying and selling served South Greenville members well until 1931 when its store was closed. Its business moved out into the community by mutual agreement of the Grange committee and one from the old Equity Organization at Greenville; the Greenville Co-Operative Gas Co. became an entity on Aug. 7, 1931.

The importance of the early grange is brought out in newspaper items throughout its active, formative years. An article in the Oct. 18, 1873 issue of The Crescent gives Editor Sam Ryan Jr.'s suggestion for action in Wisconsin: "Every grange should petition Congress for such an appropriation as will give six feet of water navigation in the Fox River and four feet in the Wisconsin River. That improvement will checkmate the two great railway corporations of this State by compelling them to charge reasonable freight rates. Petition! Petition!" (Editor Ryan was not above promoting or courting backing from pressure points for his personal fights.)

The 50-year history of South Greenville Grange describes how it happened that this particular grange outlived so many others. In early 1874, there was a listing of seven granges in Outagamie alone with C. M. Brainard, Binghamton, noted as the district deputy for the four counties of Outagamie, Oconto, Shawano and Door. They were listed by name and individual secretary in the Crescent for Feb. 7, 1874:

Outagamie-Scott Daniels, Black Creek; Maple Creek-John Nickle, New London; Stephenville-Ira Scott, Stephenville; Greenville-E.M. Gowell, Greenville; Grand Chute-Daniel

County, were relics of these activities," the history relates. "Nor was cooperation limited to distribution. Crop reports were circulated, cooperative dairies multiplied, flour mills were operated and patents issued for the manufacture of farm machinery. The outcome in some states and perhaps to the grange at large was ruin, and many granges dropped out.

"South Greenville Grange thus claims the honor of having been tested and having lived through the most trying years in the history of the grange. It was one of the few granges that learned in order to live it must develop the original social and educational object of the grange. Branching out in these directions, the (South) Greenville Grange has been able to overcome all obstacles with which its pathway was beset during the (first) fifty years of its life."

The South Greenville Grange has had five homes, counting the log Congress Hall owned by German settlers and located on George Schaefer. Membership was small then and meetings had to be held in members' homes.

These few loyal members soon realized that grange survival depended on a firm and growing organization. So, they built a new hall, again on Grange Master Pingel's property but this time farther away from the farm buildings endangered by the earlier fire. As hoped, the grange unit took on new life.

A new home was needed by 1894, however. One reason was the need for larger quarters. Another was even more pressing—the Pingel farm had been sold to a farmer who opposed the grange movement and who demanded the group vacate his premises. Thus it was that the fourth hall was constructed on the present site but just north of today's hall. This time, the building was constructed to house a complete stage and a juvenile department room, together with a 35-stall horse barn attached to the building.

Everything was running smoothly for a long time, until the automobile came along to outdate the horse and buggy. The proposed highway went right through the horse barns, no longer needed in the late 1920s. Besides, by this time the grange hall was being used for more programs, chicken dinners and dances. The move was started for a new hall, only this time non-members and business people were included in the well-organized fund drive. The present hall was built, a big ceremony held at the cornerstone laying Sept. 9, 1928. A community dance was held April 6, 1929 with the formal dedication taking place June 30, 1929.

Grange masters through the years include John L. Pingel, who served from 1873 to 1881 the first time around, then later from 1885 to 1887, John Zachow, Julius Waite, A.J. Nagel, Henry Schultz, Herman Ihde (who also was Wisconsin State Grange master for 20 years), Charles Haase, George R. Schaefer (who served 21 years), William Menning, R.J. Schaefer, Wallace Pingel, John R. Schaefer, Herbert Wickesberg, Henry D. Schaefer, Harold Reinders, Earl Pingel, Ann Crawford and present Master Paul Porter, who is on his third time around in office. Porter, who lives in Medina, served as master from 1957 to 1960 and from 1965 through 1966. Harvey Jamison recorded grange minutes for a span of 20 years; Mrs. Henry D. Schaefer, present secretary and historian, has held that office for 10 years.

'South Greenville Grange . . . claims the honor of having been tested and having lived through the most trying years in the history of the grange. It was one of the few granges that learned (to) develop the original social and educational objects of the grange.'

Huntley, Appleton; South Greenville-William Smith, Wakefield; Dale-David Balliet, Medina. The headline read "Patrons of Husbandry."

The Golden Jubilee history of South Greenville Grange states that it was organized at a time which marked the greatest growth of the Order of the Patrons of Husbandry in the country. "The organization at that time was very active. Grange agents (these were subordinate officials, often appointed by organization officers) bought everything from farm machinery to women's dresses. "Hundreds of grain elevators came into existence, cotton and tobacco were stored in grange owned warehouses even steamboat lines and mutual insurance companies were formed, according to the historical article.

"The Town of Vinland Insurance Company of Winnebago County and Town of Ellington Insurance Company, Outagamie today's Spencer Road about a mile north of the present grange. It was here that 42 people gathered on Oct. 17, 1873 to organize. Deputy Brainard, then located at Black Creek, was in charge; according to the notice in the Oct. 25, 1873 issue of The Crescent, J. L. Pingel was elected master; Seth J. Perry, overseer; W. Smith the secretary, and Fred Walter, treasurer. The Crescent noted that "this promises to be a lively organization."

The grange soon had its own hall, built by its members on the Pingel farm, but that building lasted only until 1880 when it was destroyed along with everything in it on March 27. The Appleton Crescent in reporting the fire said "the building was a great convenience to the general public, and it seems hard to believe that it was destroyed by an incendiary."

This was the most critical period in the history of the South Greenville Grange, according to the 1948 history written by

Time on Their Hands

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP) —The Archambaults are in a line of work that has unusual hazards: bees, hornets, bats, pigeons and over-protective mother starlings.

They repair and maintain tower clocks in New England.

The Archambaults—father Edward, 66, and son William, 41 — operate Tower Clock Specialists in Waltham, a two man company set up to service New England's approximately 800 tower clocks.

"I wouldn't call it a dangerous profession, but there are some hazards," William said.

"I've been attacked by a starling that was protecting her nest. And then there are pigeons. They're a special menace, especially for clocks. The pigeon white mixes with the clock oil. One pigeon can ruin a clock."

"And bats," said Edward. "There are not as many as there used to be in the old days, but they're there. You have to ignore them. I mean, if there's a bunch of bats there, you walk right in and let them peep all they want."

The Archambaults see maintaining these often ancient time pieces high in towers of mills, churches, libraries, town halls and schools as a commitment to preserve "one of the few links that we have with the past that are still in actual, working use today."

"They are one of the things that we have left in New England that has anything to do with our heritage," Edward said. "The hitching post is gone, the ice truck is gone, the vegetable vendor coming through the streets, he's gone. The lamplights are gone."

The Archambaults make service calls throughout the region at prices ranging from $30 for a simple inspection to more than $1,000 for conversion of a mechanical clock to an electric clock.

Since no one is manufacturing mechanical tower clocks any more, the Archambaults maintain their own machine shop to make parts they can no longer buy.

Most of the locks they service are 35 to 120 years old, William said. The oldest is the 212-year-old clock at the old South Meeting House in Boston.

"It's still in its original condition and it's still operating," William said. "It's a beautiful thing. The gears are made of apple wood because they didn't know how to machine cut metal in those days."

The Archambaults are not worried about running out of business.

"What many people don't know is that these clocks are made to last," William said. "Most will last 500 years. In most cases, they'll outlive the buildings they're in."

Edward Archambault, left, and his son, William, work on an old tower clock on the Unitarian church in Harrisville, R.I. The father-son team is in great demand, servicing about 800 tower clocks in New England. (AP wirephoto)

Kashmir, the home of these children, is a place likened to paradise in the in-between months of the spring and fall.

They greet strangers with cries of "Salaam, salaam," hello and welcome, these ragged children of Kashmir (above), not knowing how poor they are. A child walks beside her mother (right) as they carry earthenware along a road. Children face work early in life as they live in mountain valleys often isolated from the outside world by avalanches or deep snows.

A child beams happily. The faces of Kashmir's children show the many racial influences that have affected the valley over milleniums — some could be European, others Indian. Persian features are common; some have the faces of nomads from Afghanistan or Central Asia. Kashmir is a protectorate of India and has been the object of several bloody conflicts since World War II between India and Pakistan.

Children play near their village of floating gardens. Though they play baseball and cricket, life begins to be a serious matter very early as they help their parents work the small patches of rocky land.

Editor's note: Growing up in New York in the Depression, Sam Levenson first wanted to be a violinist. When he saw unemployed symphony musicians underbidding him for jobs, he switched to teaching, but only until he could put together an act and come back as a comedian. Today, he is one of America's premier humorists. In the following excerpt from his new book, "In One Era and Out the Other," he remembers not only Mama and Papa and their kind of marriage which made a home for 10 children but also a world so real it's hard to believe it's not still there.

It was hard to tell whether the papas and mamas of that era were happily married. The subject was not open for discussion, certainly not with their children.

"Are you happy, Ma?"

"I got nothing else to think about?"

Nobody ever told Mama that marriage was supposed to make her happy; certainly Papa hadn't. Nobody had promised him happy either.

Mature people prayed for good health, good fortune and an honorable old age. A husband was supposed to make a living and a wife was supposed to make a life of it. Only children talked of happiness; they still believed in fairy tales.

Human beings, the old folks said, don't live happily forever after—most of the time not even during. So it was wise, in marriage and in everything else, to expect the worst. Then if it turned out to be only worse, it still wasn't too bad.

Marriage was one of those things you were supposed to save for your old age, happy or not.

"Love, shmlove!" Papa used to say. "I love blintzes; did I marry one?"

The word love embarrassed them. It was an unmentionable, like brassiere, hernia and miscarriage. Not that they didn't believe in love. They felt it but avoided the precise definition that young people demand.

To Mama love was not passion or infatuation or compatability. She had given birth to ten kids without any of those. "Love," said Mama after many years of marriage, "is what you have been through with someone."

Love was made up of satisfaction ("Ten kids, thank God, is plenty"), sharing ("If he can take it, I can take it"), optimism ("Worse it couldn't get!") and friendship—not in the style of Romeo and Juliet but more like Damon and Pythias.

I knew my parents valued each other because Papa told me always to listen to Mama and Mama told me always to listen to

Love, shmlove

By Sam Levenson

Papa. Because Mama always watched at the window when Papa left for work and whispered to herself about his being "a good man, a learned man, to work so hard in a shop, it's a pity." Because at lunchtime she had me deliver a pot of hot soup two miles in the snow to Papa's shop so "he should know." Because Papa wouldn't spend a penny on himself unless Mama spent on herself. Share and share alike. So the day Mama had all her teeth pulled, Papa bought a suit.

If the papas were at all romantic before marriage, they quickly shed "the foolishness" as soon after as possible. My father never took my mother out before they were married—and afterwards only if they were headed for the maternity hospital, which in Mama's case was often enough to give her rosy cheeks: "If it's nice out we'll walk; if it's raining we'll take an umbrella."

PAPA WENT ALONE

They never had a honeymoon. "We didn't have enough money, so Papa went by himself." There were anniversaries but they went uncelebrated.

"How long are you married, Pa?"

"Please! Not while I'm eating."

No candy, no flowers, no inscribed charms to wear on bracelets; nothing but a big, fat, immovable, indestructible wedding ring. The mamas believed the best way to keep it bright and shiny was to soak it in hot soapy water several times a day. In a large family this was no problem.

At the end of the day Mama could count on Papa to come home with those three little words on his lips that made it all worth while: "What's for supper?"

Every night, after we kids were in bed and supposedly asleep, I could hear Mama and Papa in the kitchen, not making love but reading about it. Papa would read aloud the daily installment of a romantic novel that ran on forever in the Yiddish newspaper.

He read in a dull, monotonous voice, perhaps to avoid betraying any emotional involvement in the subject matter, while Mama pressed his shirts, her tempo getting faster and faster as the story got hotter: "And he drew her toward him, looking into the quivering pupils of her wide blue eyes and kissed her on the trembling lips—"

"Again?" said Mama, her iron coming to a dead stop. "He kissed her only yesterday!" Papa took a closer look at the paper and hurled it against the wall. "You're right! It's yesterday's paper!"

The day my brother and I caught Papa kissing Mama we got hysterical. "What happened?" "I don't know. I think maybe the landlord died!"

It had to be an event of supreme emotional significance. Papa had not kissed Mama even at their wedding. Theirs was a marriage of convenience between two poor families. The first time he met her was at the wedding—and he would never kiss a girl the first time he met her!

BESIDES, IT WAS UNMANLY

Generally, kissing was considered unmanly. The presence of so many children proved his manliness but kissing, especially in the presence of his children, was not the manly thing to do.

If any one of us tried to kiss Mama, we would get brushed off with "Go away, crazy! You got nothing better to do?" Besides it was dangerous to kiss Mama. She always wore a needle near the neckline of her dress and a wild embrace could be fatal to the embracer.

It was not the fashion of those times to smother children with kisses but to smother them with care. I knew I wasn't being kissed but I also knew I was being loved, even more than I deserved. It made one rise to the deserving.

We were living witness to love and marriage at its best—and its worst. Devotion, sacrifice, adoration, sympathy, loyalty, tenderness, along with anger, alienation and bitterness. A loving couple and a quarreling couple could be one and the same couple.

The secret of an enduring marriage was no secret. They quarreled. Married people exercised their marriage the way babies exercised their lungs, by yelling. They strengthened their matrimonial muscles by giving them a daily workout.

Psychiatrists do not look down upon the quarrel. Confrontation is also communication. The wide-open dialogue, the airing of the disparity between "is" and "ought," the itemized bill of particular offenses brought to the surface to be contested, denied and sometimes admitted to, may have been my parents' version of today's encounter sessions.

They would rather fight than switch. Perhaps it wasn't even a fight. Perhaps they instinctively recognized that incompatibility is inherent in people and ideas, that dichotomy is really unity,

Sam Levenson grew up before the Age of Romance. So he doesn't remember Mama greeting Papa at the door with a rose in her teeth. More likely it was a curse of some sort. But that's what married life was like, says Sam.

that positives cannot live without negatives and that opposites need each other.

WHO QUARRELS WITH STRANGERS?

All of which, if true, led to the conclusion that if a man didn't have a wife he'd have to quarrel with total strangers, and for that they can take you away.

Like the sounds of slamming doors, banging pots, beating rugs and chopping meat, the bickering of bedfellows was an accepted household noise. ("Must you quarrel with me on the street?" What do we have a home for?")

Some quarrels started in the morning, were suspended when the man of the house left for work, were resumed in the evening without missing a beat. Marital scraps, like food scraps, could be reheated. "He's home!" Evening events were the best. There was time enough for a 15-rounder.

We didn't need alarm clocks. The Kowalciks' gong rang at 6:00 a.m., the Browns' at 6:30; the Michniks' at 6:45. If a morning fight ran on for a half hour or more, it meant the husband was sick and not going to work that day. If there was no quarrel at all, Mama would worry. "It's been like that all day. Sammy, go see if they are all right."

These were our soap operas. We could tune in any time and pick up snatches of dramatic dialogue. We knew the cast! we knew the lines. But we never tired of them. Monogamy, yes; monotony, no.

Sometimes she talked first: "I don't understand you. Monday you liked fried herring, Tuesday you liked fried herring. Now all of a sudden you don't like fried herring!"

Youth holds out

For many of our marriageables, wedlock is on the way out. They are conscientious objectors to all locks. Even a simple gold wedding band may cut off the circulation.

Grandpa said, "Love, shmlove"—but got married. His grandson prefers unbridled, free-lance love.

He loudly proclaims his affection for girls and his disaffection from marriage. He wants all the fringe benefits but won't join the union.

"I don't want a marriage license," he says (and she nods), "your hypocritical scrap of paper, the lease you matrimonial slumlords want me to sign so I can live in a decrepit institution unfit for human habitation." (She nods again.) "Either you renovate, remodel or rebuild or we don't move in." (Nod, nod, nod.)

"As for the marriage vows you choose to demean into a business contract, we will accept them if we must, but only with all the protective clauses found in other contracts. We want them on approval, renegotiable upon the demand of either party, with marital satisfaction guaranteed or premarital status cheerfully returned. We do not want to live in the hallowed halls of marriage forever after. We want only visiting privileges.

"We cannot take vows based upon forever-after, since we do not believe in it. All our beliefs are pro tem or ad hoc. This makes all our commitments tentative, including marriage. All bonds should self-destruct before bondage sets in."

Our young are considerate of our feelings and do not attack our marriages on a personal basis. We are good people, our children concede, but we are cowardly. We set a bad example by compromising with life.

We accepted the possible. We should have held out for the possibility of the impossible. In their view, if marriage is not the original sin, staying married under anything less than a permanently ecstatic alliance is equivalent to living in sin.

Myth and reality of motherhood

NEW YORK (AP) — There's a vast difference between the myth and the reality of motherhood, insists Shirley Radl, who has written a book "to warn unsuspecting young couples what it's all about."

By Joy Stilley

AP Newsfeatures writer

"It's also intended to give comfort to all the women who feel guilty because they can't live up to the impossible standards," adds the author of "Mother's Day Is Over," herself the mother of two young children.

Mrs. Radl thinks that being a mother takes special skills and that not every woman is cut out to be one any more than every man is cut out to be a father.

"Although I hope people who really want children and have the skills will have them, you should know what you're getting into," she explains. "Don't let yourself be pressured into it."

Among the pressures she cites are women's magazines, "which present motherhood as fulfilling, a way of cementing a relationship;" would-be grandparents; the peer group, and television programming and commercials.

"The TV says all mothers are pretty and happy and have nice hairdos and wear fashionable pantsuits when they're scrubbing the floor. When Junior comes in and sloshes up the floor she says it's okay because she's got this new Zippy cleaner and will fix it in a snap.

"Actually she's usually wearing jeans or some old shift and tennis shoes, her hair is up in rollers and it's been a bad day, and when Junior messes up the floor she says it's not okay and what she says isn't printable."

In the commercials, she continues, children are all well behaved and clean except when showing how they get their clothes dirty; they don't cry, and when they do misbehave slightly Mom is able to have a nice chat with them and straighten things out.

That isn't so in real life, says Mrs. Radl, who remembers her own disillusionment surfaced one afternoon when her children were age 2 and 3.

"It was 5 o'clock, the mother's witching hour the kids were yelling and I suddenly wondered if a person could die from irritation. I love my children (Adam, 7, and Lisa, 8) but I don't like doing all the things I have to do: give them enriching experiences; interact with their schools; do it all with a smile on your face, and never be bored.

"There's almost no time to talk to your husband, and when you do it's about how the window got broken. A good many arguments come as a result of disagreements on how to rear your kids; privacy and spontaneity are gone," continues Mrs. Radl, who fondly recalls her first eight years of marriage when, childless, she worked at a job she enjoyed and had an evening out without making elaborate arrangements.

She began talking to other women, interviewing some 200 of varied ages and economic status in her research for the book, and discovered that they too had feelings of resentment, inadequacy and guilt.

"We need to help overwhelmed parents with the problems of here and now," says Mrs. Radl, who is in the process of establishing a parental stress group in her home town of Palo Alto, Calif. "We hold group discussions and if we get enough volunteers, we plan to offer respite child care to prevent verbal and physical abuse of children and to help parents who fear they might lose self-control to cope better."

As for her own children, she says when she was halfway through the book her relationship with them changed for the better. "They knew something was bothering me, and they seemed to be relieved when they found out it's the job I don't like — not them."

HOW TO FIND THE NEWSWORTHY-QUOTE AND THE QUOTER

1. Define "Clues," writing definitions in answer column over numbered dashes.
2. Transfer letters to numbered squares in diagram, the black squares separate words.
3. When pattern is completed, quotation can be read from left to right. The first letters of the answer words, reading down, form an acrostic yielding the speaker's name.

Lovers become buddies in fight for survival

STARTING OVER. By Dan Wakefield. Delacorte. 290 Pages. $7.95.

"Potter was lucky; everyone told him so" is the first sentence of Dan Wakefield's acerbic new novel. It also is the last. But in between those two flat statements there is a long testament which shows that Potter is neither lucky nor unlucky. Rather, he is a victim.

Potter, first name Phil, is divorced. So is Marilyn Crashaw. The two start out as lovers but their affair fades and they instead become buddies, dedicated to helping each other survive in contemporary America. Their battle to keep afloat in a society dominated by drugs, promiscuous sex, alcohol, encounter groups—to name a few at random—is a losing one since neither learns from past mistakes.

But it also is a funny one. For Wakefield's book essentially is comic satire and the situations he gets his embattled protagonists into are bitterly comic—for the reader if not for the characters.

Wakefield writes very well and his jaundiced look at the current scene provides him many fine opportunities to skewer with razor sharp prose a good bit of the nonsense that makes up part of the popular culture.

What happens to Potter and his buddy Marilyn as they move unknowingly from one disaster to another could happen to anyone—married or divorced.

Wakefield's novel is a powerful one. There's a lot of sadness in it, but there's also a lot of fun.

Any hope left for man?

ONE COSMIC INSTANT-MAN'S FLEETING SUPREMACY. By John A. Livingston. Houghton Mifflin. 228 Pages. $5.95.

History is replete with ecological disasters. Ever since man discovered he could walk on his hind legs, freeing his hands for creative purposes, the conquest and destruction of nature has stalked him. Why? Because the Judaeo-Christian tradition and the egocentric conception of the universe deceives man into thinking he is above and separate from nature.

This is the argument presented in this book written by a distinguished naturalist and professor of environmental studies.

But since the destruction of nature by man is not instinctive but learned, Livingston writes, "we may have hope." All we have to do is undergo a cultural revolution. If not, we are doomed.

No mystery here; just plain dull

BEST DETECTIVE STORIES OF THE YEAR. Edited by Allen J. Hubin. Dutton. 245 Pages. $6.95.

The best story in this collection doesn't really belong here, but be grateful that it is. It's called "The Debt" and it originally appeared in "The Atlantic Monthly."

In it, author Jesse Hill Ford tells of murder in the coldest blood. But Ford's writing skill is such that the reader not only can't sympathize with the victim but, instead, is completely on the side of the murderers. This is an extremely difficult feat to bring off, but Ford does, and does it well.

The other 16 stories in this volume "come nowhere near 'The Debt' in writing skill or conception. "Hijack," by Robert L. Fish, is a nicely-written piece about a novel way of shaking down an airline for ransom, and so is "Never Trust A Partner," by Robert Eckels, which deals with shaking down an unscrupulous art dealer.

The rest of the stories aren't especially notable, however, and several are just plain bad.

Super shortcuts for sewing

Dear Heloise:

I love to sew and am always on the lookout for new shortcuts. Recently I learned a really great way to put in hems with a type of blind-stitch method.

Household Hints by Heloise

Turn up the hem and pin it in place.

Then turn this portion back toward the right side, being sure to expose about an eighth to a quarter-inch of the top of the hem.

Now, on your machine, begin stitching on this small allowance of the hem. Be careful not to sew through any of the main dress section — only the single hem.

Take about five or six stitches. Then carefully (and cautiously hand-rotating the machine wheel), come over and take one stitch on the dress section. Continue on around in this same way, till it's finished.

This is really like putting in a regular hem — only it's done on the machine. Makes it so much stronger and very neat looking.

Especially good for pants' hems.

Ann

Great! I tried it and it works beautifully, and takes so much less time, too. Wish I had known about it years ago.

PICTURE THIS

Dear Heloise:

As a former art student, I'm very pleased that my 4-year-old son seems to be very talented at drawing.

With two children in a four-room apartment we are a little limited for wall space, so are unable to save too many of his masterpieces.

After he completes a picture, we tape it to his bedroom wall, and after the entire wall is covered, we take a color photograph of the wall. After the picture is taken, all the drawings are taken down and we start all over again.

In this way we have fond memories without any clutter.

I hope that this will be of some help to your readers with artistic children.

Linda Anderson

It is a wonderful feeling when a child seems to be following in your arty footsteps!

By preserving pictures of his work as you do, you are really helping him by letting him know you care and appreciate his efforts.

A WELCOME MAT

Dear Heloise:

How I've always hated the job of changing shelf paper in my kitchen cupboards!

I'm sure you have become just as frustrated at measuring, cutting, etc., and still finding that it doesn't fit right.

After just such an infuriating session with this nasty job, I got the idea to use paper place mats as liners instead of shelf paper.

This works even better than shelf paper, and can be changed in a jiffy in case of spills.

I tape the edges together to avoid slipping, and sometimes find it necessary to use two or three thicknesses in some places, depending on what I store there.

They come in pretty colors and designs, too.

A SMILE TO MATCH

Dear Heloise:

We live in an older apartment and the bathroom is pretty drab. Our landlord doesn't allow anything on the walls that could cause holes.

So I cut out jokes and cartoons and other interesting articles (short ones!) and taped them onto the wall.

Love, shmove . . .

"Herring! Herring! It's not the herring! It's the last 20 years."

Sometimes he talked first: "You can always leave me."

"I'm gonna leave you and make you happy?"

A dying quarrel sometimes had to be revived. You can't quarrel alone. "I don't like the way you're sitting there not saying anything."

It would seem that our constant exposure to the quarreling of the mamas and papas around us might have turned us prematurely cynical. On the contrary, our early combat training taught us to bring our "as you like it" in focus with "like it is" — not only on the subject of marriage but on people partnerships in general.

We came to realize every man and woman has something to say in his own defense, that there are not only two sides to an argument but dozens, that in human relations there is no perfect and final answer—that some ideas may never be happily wedded to others, that the dialogue, whispered or shouted, is eternal and that the seeking of the answer is the answer.

We had absorbed a mature point of view. There's nothing wrong with marriage; it's just the living together afterward that's murder.

Blackberry cobbler

Memories are stirred by the early dusk of a cool evening; a slight wind whispering in the tall trees surrounding our cottage; the smell of woodsmoke wafted on that same breeze; the delectable odor of blackberry cobbler baking in my oven. All these combine to set up a wavering image of something that happened long ago, an event that doesn't quite jell.

By Georgia Bond Smart

Then my family and visiting friends come in from fishing and playing, audibly savoring the supper smells—the frying fish, the potatoes with onions. These almost smother the fragrance of the fresh, berry cobbler that's cooling on the old fashioned kitchen cabinet.

After they wash up, we gather round the big square table covered by red, checked oilcloth. The centerpiece amidst the full serving dishes is a flickering, smoking kerosene lamp. A child says, "Ummm, Mom, that cobbler smells super. I'm sure glad we picked those berries for you this afternoon."

The weird cry of a loon on the lake suddenly gives me a lonely, homesick feeling. In that moment the wavering picture that has haunted me all afternoon comes sharply into focus. This isn't my table, my husband, my children—my friends of today. It's another table, another cottage, the smells and events of another era . . .

It had been a full afternoon's trip from our small, flat town to the Illinois River and across by ferry to the rolling hills and thick woods beyond. We had come to visit friends who, a few years past, had chosen this strange, isolated way of life for their family of five. Mr. Tipword worked in a saw mill and fished for a living.

When at last we drote into the clay-packed clearing in front of their tiny brick cottage, we piled out of the paneled truck eagerly—Mama, Papa, three older brothers, a big sister, and I. I was only 5-years-old.

As the Tipword family surrounded us jovfully, Papa flung up his head, sniffing in appreciation. "I smell woodsmoke and blackberry cobbler. I do declare, Gladys, there ain't no better smell or taste on earth than one of your cobblers."

Mrs. Tipword beamed. "I just had a feelin' company was comin' and I got a big juicy cobbler coolin' on the window yonder. Charlie," she turned to her husband, "get along and clean those fish you caught. We'll have a big supper reay before you know it."

"Come in, come in! I'm so glad yo'all came to visit!"

Afraid of the black night closing in so quickly, I stayed close to Mama as she chattered happily, catching her friend up on outside news as they made supper.

When we gathered noisily around their big, old, oil-cloth covered table, it mattered not that we were eating off cracked plates and with tarnished, peeling silverware—this was just like home.

But eating the fresh, fried fish was an unusual treat since we lived where the creeks didn't produce many fish. Of course, Mama had to pick the bones out for me.

The sound of an unknown animal outside startled me. Mama's bulky warmth was comforting as a wave of homesickness almost brought tears—even with all my family right there.

When we finally got to the cobbler, the wonderful taste was all that Papa had said it would be . . .

Like a daydreaming pupil suddenly alerted by a sharp slap on the hand, I am brought back to the present by hands waving in front of my eyes, and by a loud, laughing chorus.

"Hey, Mom—yoo—hoo! Come back from wherever you are. We're ready for that cobbler!"

Germans in Africa

Beer and work ethic just like back in Wurtzburg

WINDHOEK, South West Africa (AP) —The beer and work ethic are much the same as in Wurtzburg or Wuppertal. And 6,000 miles as the jet flies from Frankfurt — once a week — life

By Euan Stace

Associated Press writer

goes on as it does back home: hot rolls and coffee for breakfast, a hard day's work followed by Kultur or Gemutlichkeit.

Of all Germany's former colonies on this continent, South West Africa alone remains so firmly German.

Togo, the Cameroons and Ruanda-Burundi were Gallicized by the French and Belgians. In Tanganyika (now Tanzania) they speak English when not Swahili, but accents here still have a German tinge.

The Germans came here in the 1880's in search of some of the gold, raw materials and glory Britain and France were winning through empire in the then dark continent.

They found diamonds — South West Africa is the world's largest producer of gem stones — and copper in abundance, but glory escaped them.

German control ended during World War I when South African troops marched into Windhoek and accepted the surrender of the German military commander.

The German population then was put at 15,000. By the time South Africa was given a League of Nations mandate to administer the territory in 1921, half of them had either left or been expelled, to come trickling back in the late 1920's and 1930's.

Many endured internment during World War II and dispossession of farms and other properties. One of Germany's largest foreign investments of the time, a copper mine at Tsumeb, was seized by South Africa and sold to a consortium after the war.

Between the two wars it was official policy to "de-Germanize" the territory. This now seems one of the least successful of any government's ideas.

Germans make up a quarter of the 100,000 whites inhabiting the 318,261 square mile territory but have more than a quarter of the say in the way life is fashioned. Total population of the territory is about 750,000.

The pumpnickel is as fresh as the Allgemeine Zeitung newspaper printed daily in Windhoek.

Though German is no longer an official language, the casual visitor might never know. Salutations are given in Afrikaans —

South African Dutch —when not in German. Elsewhere the day may begin with breakfast. Here it begins with fruehstueck.

The steak and salad fare of the governing country give way to rostbraten and served by comely waitresses in beer gardens.

Hansa, a local lager, last year was second in an international brewing contest —bested only by one from Germany — and goes down well at the local Oktoberfest. However, lederhose, leather hiking shorts, donned by some are uncomfortable in the 100 degree heat.

Throughout the territory, German occupation is evident. Old buildings in Windhoek's main street date back to before World War I. So does a church at Karibib and the railway station at Swakopmund.

Windhoek's main thoroughfare is Kaiser Wilhelmstrasse and one of its side streets is still named for Goering, the father of Hermann, Hitler's Luftwaffe leader. Goering senior was the first reichskomissar appointed by Chancellor Bismarck to the territory.

South West's atmosphere draws immigrants and tourists from Germany, though few come now with the idea of farming as they were sometimes begged and bribed to do before 1915.

Most of the newcomers are technicians, many of them working for German import companies or agencies. Demand for German goods is strong and German after-sales service adds to the demand for goods and technicians.

For the emigres, Sudwest, as they call it, is one place where they can expect to speak their own language and live in familiar surroundings, enjoying a high standard of living.

The troublesome political situation — the territory has a majority of blacks and the United Nations is seeking an end to South African control — seems remote while listening to brass band music in a beer garden. Most Germans here seem educated to being nonpolitical.

Anyway, they say little about it. That kind of German interest in South West topped in 1915, a resident explained.

The photographs above are part of experiments in picture reproduction conducted by several Post-Crescent departments.

FOR ED McMAHON

Jack Paar's return to a television talk show has proved to be a disappointment. What do you think is the reason?—T. F. Kane, Durham, N.C.

● Jack and his colleagues evidently thought that he could pick up where he left off ten years ago. But because of the many changes in our society, the parade has passed him by. Those water-closet jokes that caused such a furor when he was in his prime would be tame stuff today. The Tonight Show has been on for almost 11 years, and we've kept in close touch with the scene and our viewers. Many of our people who are now 27 years old and married were with us as teenagers. They grew up with us.

FOR AL KALINE, Detroit Tiger baseball star

I've heard that only one batter ever pinch-hit for Ted Williams. Did anybody ever pinch-hit for you?—James McLoskey, Pacoima, Calif.

● Fred Hatfield pinch-hit for me back in 1954. He hit a home run—and he's never let me forget it.

FOR PAT MORROW, Rita Jacks Harrington of "Peyton Place"

Is it true that you are giving up acting to study law?—B. K., Whittier, Calif.

● No. Someone printed that I hated acting, but that absolutely isn't so. Acting is fun. And it pays. That's the money that is getting me through law school. Eventually I want to be a politician, and my father convinced me that training and a background in law are necessary before entering politics.

FOR JANET LYNN, skating star

It's no secret that you pray before each performance and consider yourself a religious person. Is there any one experience when you felt the presence of the Lord most intensely?—B. A. Martin, Kankakee, Ill.

● Yes. I remember, when I was in the seventh grade, sitting in church. The pastor's sermon brought forth a torrent of tears, and I vowed from that moment to seek a deeper meaning in life.

FOR SEN. CHARLES H. PERCY (R-Ill.)

I hear you have presidential ambitions, but isn't the Water-gate scandal draining power from the White House? And shouldn't it?—James Scott, Scranton, Pa.

● The executive branch has had far too much power. The Congress is beginning to reassert itself in an effort to become, once again, a full-fledged and coequal partner in government. But the Congress should be very careful that it does not overplay its hand to the point of defying our constitutional history.

FOR DR. JOYCE BROTHERS

When an adult plays games with children should the adult let them win or play to the best of his adult powers?—Lynnette Paulsen, Lansing, Mich.

● I don't think an adult should pretend to lose to make a child feel better, because that's dishonest. The emphasis in skill games should be on teaching the child better techniques. If the adult wants the child to win, he should play games in which luck is important.

FOR DIZZY DEAN, ex-pitcher, now sportscaster

What is your feeling toward the new "designated hitter" rule in the American League?—Will Page, Statesboro, Ga.

● I don't like seeing that chance at bat being taken away from the pitcher.

FOR SUSAN SAINT JAMES of "McMillan & Wife"

Whatever happened to the baby that Sally was supposed to have at the end of last season?—Barbara A. Wellman, Clinchco, Va.

● The creator and executive producer, Leonard Stern, decided to write the baby out of the script. Rumor has it that the baby couldn't act!

FOR JOHN G. SCHMITZ, 1972 Conservative party presidential candidate

Why was your campaign ignored by the mass media?—William H. Tribe II, Ogden, Utah

● The mass media have generally ignored candidates other than those of the two major parties, except when there was good reason to believe another candidacy might affect the winner of the election. The prospect of my affecting the election was destroyed because Senator McGovern was decisively repudiated by the American people from the beginning.

FOR SEN. ERNEST HOLLINGS (D-S.C.)

What is the advantage of Gerovital, the Rumanian drug that you and other senators are seeking to bring into this country?—R. Z., Hayward, Calif.

● Gerovital, called the "youth drug," is widely used in Europe and Mexico. It was developed by a 73-year-old woman doctor, Ana Aslan, in Bucharest. Tom Eagleton, Howard Cannon of Nevada and I had an Army doctor from Walter Reed Army Medical Center check out the claims for this drug as a cure for arthritis, for making hair grow and general rehabilitation. The doctor came away much impressed. Still, the U.S. bans the drug. I think we ought to obtain its entry into this country to help the elderly.
